Big Sur youth winning battle of her life

■ This Christmas was more than just another birthday for 8-year-old

By SUSAN BECK

CHRISTMAS IS a time for counting one's blessings and looking to the new year with hopes it will be better than ever.

This Christmas, Alan and Nancy Perlmutter, residents of Big Sur for the past 15 years, had more blessings to count than they could have ever imagined.

One of their daughters, Noelle, celebrated her eighth birthday Christmas Day, which was nothing short of a miracle.

Anyone who recently observed the vivacious Noelle playing with her brother, Benjamin, 3, at her father's River Inn Restaurant, would hardly believe anything had happened to the

■ Greenwood irritated with board's 'passive' stance to development; will challenge Ferguson

By SUSAN BECK

IN AN unprecedented maneuver, Robert Greenwood, 20-year Carmel Valley resident and veteran member of the Carmel Valley Property Owners Association (CVPOA), is challenging the board's current vice president, George Ferguson, for his seat in January.

Greenwood is fed up with what he says is the current board's passivity toward development in Carmel Valley and has singled out Ferguson in particular.

"He and I are quite opposed in our views," said Greenwood, a past presi-

Under fire, city eases delivery truck fee requirements

Business community remains skeptical that enforcement of 74-year-old ordinance has any merit

By SCOTT BREARTON

THE CITY of Carmel will no longer require individual delivery trucks to pay a $60 annual licensing fee to do business in Carmel, Assistant City Administrator Greg D'Ambrosio said this week.

In response to members of the business community who argued the ordinance would hurt small business, city officials are still requiring every business which makes deliveries in Carmel to pay the special license fee, but not for each vehicle within their respective fleets.

"The changes to the program were reviewed about two weeks ago," D'Ambrosio said. "Originally, the fee was going to be charged per vehicle."

"The delivery license fee is still in effect," he added. "However, the company that is delivering in Carmel will only have to get one delivery truck permit per business, regardless of the number of vehicles they have."

D'Ambrosio said each vehicle will still be required to display a city decal, which will be available for $1 each. According to D'Ambrosio, the ordinance will not apply to long-distance haulers from out-of-state.

The fee, which ranged from $15 to $50 (depending on vehicle weight) was changed last year to a flat rate of $60, according to D'Ambrosio.

"The fee hasn't been raised in more than 20 years," D'Ambrosio said. "We looked at the cost of enforce-

Randazzo has vision for airport land use

By SUSAN BECK

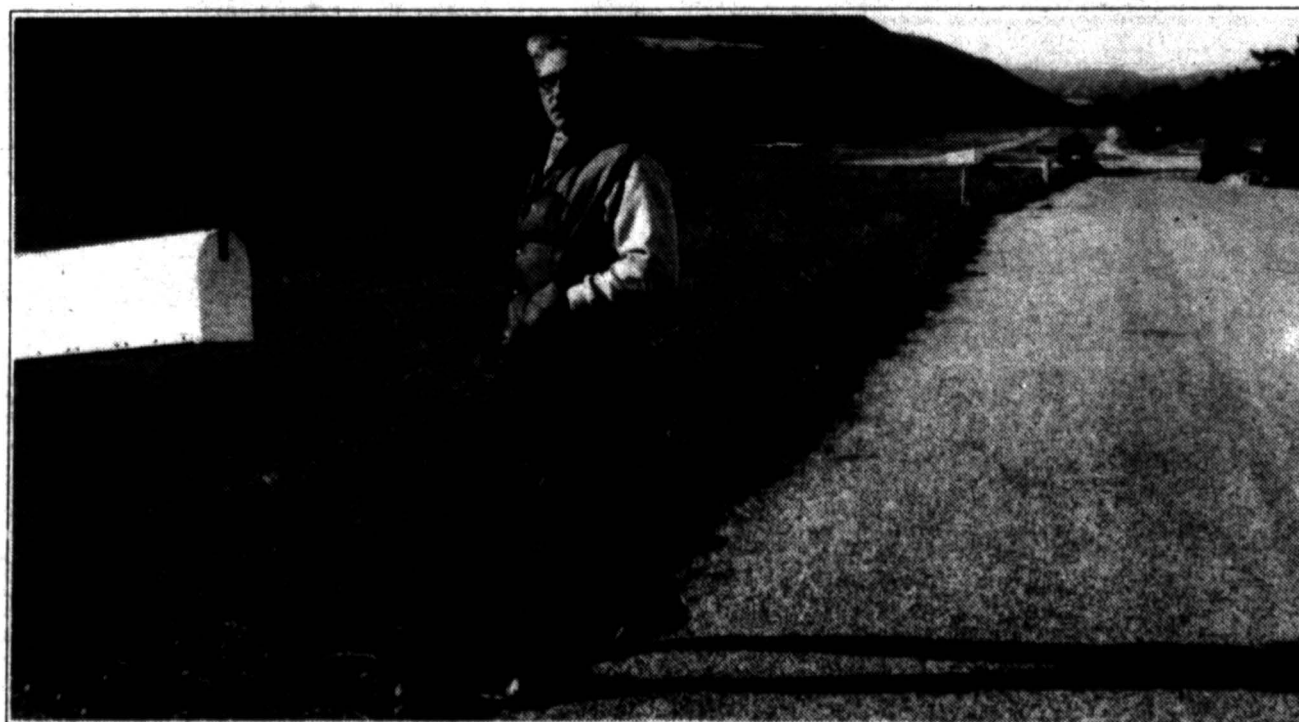

SOME CARMEL Valley residents are seeking alternate uses for the Carmel Valley Airport, which is on the market for $4.6 million.

Randy Randazzo, longtime Carmel Valley resident and owner of Carmel Valley Market, believes the airport property represents an opportunity to acquire land now for future use in the event Carmel Valley incorporates. The valley is now unincorporated and under the jurisdiction of Monterey County.

"We would already have a location to build a city hall with adequate parking," Randazzo said. "I would like to plan that far ahead. It won't happen in my lifetime. But I definitely think it will happen someday."

Randazzo, also a director of the Record settlement reached in PB condominium suit

A RECORD settlement — $6.825 million or $124,000 per unit — has been announced in the legal action of condominium owners at Shepherd's Knoll in Pebble Beach against the 55-unit project's developer, architects and contractors to fix structural defects.

Word on the settlement came from Beverly Goldberg of the Shepherd's Knoll management firm, Homeowners Association Management of the Monterey Peninsula.

"The recovery of $124,000 per unit is the largest per-unit settlement in California for this type of case," she said.

The condominium project is located along 17-Mile Drive in Pebble Beach.

About $4.5 million will be available for reconstruction after legal fees and other litigation costs are subtracted, Goldberg said, and that work is expected to begin this coming spring.

The Monterey County Superior Court lawsuit primarily was aimed at two parties — Prim Investments, Inc., of Nevada and general contractor Joseph B. Fratessa, Inc. In turn, those two sued many firms which had worked on the project, and a dozen parties named in the subsequent litigation contributed to the settlement.

Newsbreak delayed

Representing the homeowners was San Jose attorney Daniel Herns along with attorneys Philip Decker and Anthony Trepel. The settlement was reached in September, but announcement was delayed until all papers were signed and payments made.

Condo purchasers first noticed ceiling cracks and defective carpets.

"Testing of the buildings," Goldberg said, "revealed major design and construction defects, building code violations, defective stairways, walkways and carpets due to water intrusion and resultant wood rot and termite infestation."

"Special Master John Griffiths led the plaintiffs and defendants to the settlement granted by Judge William D. Curtis after three years of negotiations. Repair bids are now under consideration."

Karas seeks applicants for 2 boards

FIFTH DISTRICT Supervisor Sam Karas invites applications from citizens who'd like to serve on either of two county units — the Commission on the Status of Women and the Advisory Board on Alcohol and Other Drug-Related Problems.

Interested applicants living within the district are encouraged to send a letter stating their desire to serve, including home address and daytime telephone number, to Supervisor Karas at 1200 Aguajito Rd., Suite 001, Monterey 93940.

The commission advises supervisors on matters relating to women in the county. It's a three-year term, and commissioners meet the first Wednesday evening of each month at the courthouse in Salinas.

The advisory board term also is for three years.

A congressman's passion for politics

IT HAS been a long, slow ascent for Congressman Sam Farr, who recalls delivering Carmel Pine Cone newspapers as a boy and whose entry into politics, he explains, began with general notions of "making the world a better place."

Farr was elected to the Monterey County Board of Supervisors and then the California Assembly. Earlier this year, after Congressman Leon Panetta was appointed to President Clinton's cabinet as budget director, Farr was elected congressman in the 17th District.

Now between sessions, Farr can say he has gotten his feet wet — and in a big way. His turnabout from no to yes on the North American Free Trade Agreement has stirred controversy, and his influence is helping to make possible the conversion of Fort Ord into an educational center.

Farr, who returns to Washington Jan. 24, was interviewed from his Monterey office.

Pine Cone: Talk a bit about your return to California and your constituency, and the schedule you've been keeping?

Farr: One of the interesting aspects of representing a tri-county area is that you can return to your passion — that is, what got you interested in politics to begin with. I grew up here with a passion for the land, the coast, the agricultural areas — and the people. I've really had fun. I had a town hall meeting in South Monterey County and 15 people showed up. We've had meetings in Greenfield and Soledad and elsewhere.

I'm getting my offices up to par — in Salinas we moved to another room and expanded the office. With our very limited budget, we are going to involve a lot of volunteers — in Santa Cruz, at the courthouse building, and here in Monterey. These are the same places where Leon (Panetta) had all his offices, but, instead of having most of the staff here in Monterey, we've divided it up into the different offices...so we can serve all these people.

Pine Cone: Surely, when you speak of the "passion" of politics, you are not talking about sparsely attended town hall meetings and sprucing up offices.

Farr: You're right (laughs). The passion comes in dealing with people's issues at the federal government, and the big issues concern things like water — saltwater project at the mouth of the Salinas River, or imported water, which San Benito County must bring in from the San Joaquin Valley. And then there is the health-care reform...

Pine Cone: ...And has that been the major issue at these town hall meetings?

Farr: Yes, at town hall meetings, before service clubs. People have also been especially interested in NAFTA and the budget.

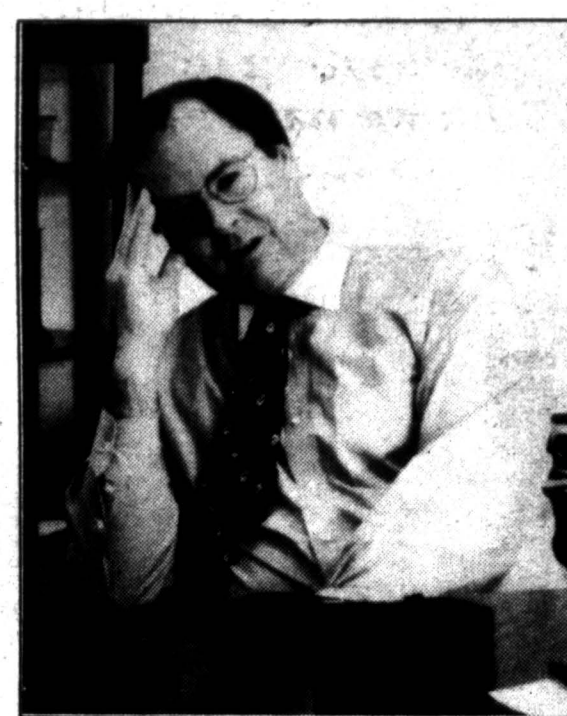

Pine Cone: People are very curi-

'The Hill's opinion of Clinton, and I think I echo that opinion, is that he is the brightest, hardest working president we've had.'

'One of the things every freshman congressman needs to learn is that Washington moves a lot slower than we had anticipated.'

'I think the demand of the work is much more grueling than I experienced as a county supervisor or a state legislator.'

ous about the life of a congressman. What was different than you thought, or threw you for a loop?

Farr: I think the demand of the work is much more grueling than I experienced as a county supervisor or a state legislator. The district is larger, the bureaucracy is huge — it's not easy to have a handle on as it is at the other levels. The pace is fast — and then there is the airplane travel back and forth. It's nine hours from Monterey to Washington, and if you are traveling east you lose three, so you are giving up 12 hours of either your nighttime or your daytime.

Pine Cone: Like someone going off to college for the first time, you must be dealing with many new things — which you never dealt with as a supervisor or an assemblyman. How does a congressman bone up? Clearly it's not all a matter of listening to the arguments on issues like NAFTA and health care.

Farr: You get less involved in the arguments at the federal level than at the state and local level, where they all pass in front of you. At the federal level, it is done at the subcommittee level, sometimes at the full committee level. Essentially, congress is rounded up to vote on the outcome. So you have to carve out little areas and subareas — the committees you sit on — where you want to invest your energies in lawmaking. You will not be able to control the outcome of all laws being made at the federal level, but you will have more of a chance with a smaller body (at the local level).

Pine Cone: With 435 members, there are enough people in congress for some of them to remain complete strangers. Isn't that so?

Farr: Yes.

Pine Cone: Did you feel important when the president called to encourage you to support him on NAFTA?

Farr: No. I had several conversations with the president before he called me on NAFTA. We had the chance to talk when I was first elected, when I was nominated. I had spoken to him many times about many issues.

Pine Cone: We only know him from television and the newspaper. How does he strike you?

Farr: The Hill's opinion of Clinton, and I think I echo that opinion, is that he is probably the brightest, hardest-working president we've had. You can have whatever qualms with him that you want, but he is smart and hard-working.

Pine Cone: What gives this away?

Farr: He's done his homework. He rolls up his sleeves. He comes over to the Hill, not only only to make State Addresses but to lobby. Al Gore's over there a lot. Panetta lives on the Hill. The cabinet is very accessible, and there is the feeling the White House is accessible.

Pine Cone: What are some of the things you realize you have to learn?

Farr: One of the things every freshman congressman needs to learn is that Washington moves a lot slower than we had anticipated. Congress is more conservative than many people realize...

Pine Cone: ...The reality of public service can be different than the image of it...

Farr: Yes, this takes me back to why I am in politics. I entered politics when I was young and in the movement of changing the world — making it a better place. I was still caught up in my Peace Corps experience, being a volunteer in South America, being really charmed by the idea of people working together to make a difference, and that's what I wanted to do.

I realized that by dealing with issues here (in the U.S.), we were influencing the world. There's the expression, 'Think globally, act locally.' And I think we can turn that around.

I think we have demonstrated in this area what land use planning can do — people come here as tourists in their professional capacity. How do you resist pressures from the outside? How do you keep a place like Big Sur wild? How do you keep agriculture in California, when we are experiencing urban sprawl everywhere you look? How do you deal with marine and coastal resources?

As you deal with such things, you set models with this country. That is the passion that is driving me.

Farr says his Monterey office 'should be used like a library'

By PAUL WOLF

HOPING TO underscore his accessibility, Rep. Sam Farr, D-17th District, said his Monterey office "should be used like a library."

"The message I would like to convey is that this is a very user-friendly office," Farr said. "We do have office hours, but the easiest way to see me is to schedule (an appointment)."

The congressman noted that certain members of his staff boast certain areas of expertise: IRS, immigration, social security. "You don't need to talk to me directly to get help on these," Farr said.

Farr noted that his job is not all political; much of it is "procedural" — helping people "with issues that need personal attention."

Like a library, Farr's office contains "a mountain of information" that is accumulated on the Hill, and the constituents "have the right to have access to it."

It is often forgotten, Farr noted, how much of his time is dedicated to assisting people with grant funding requests or citizenship problems.

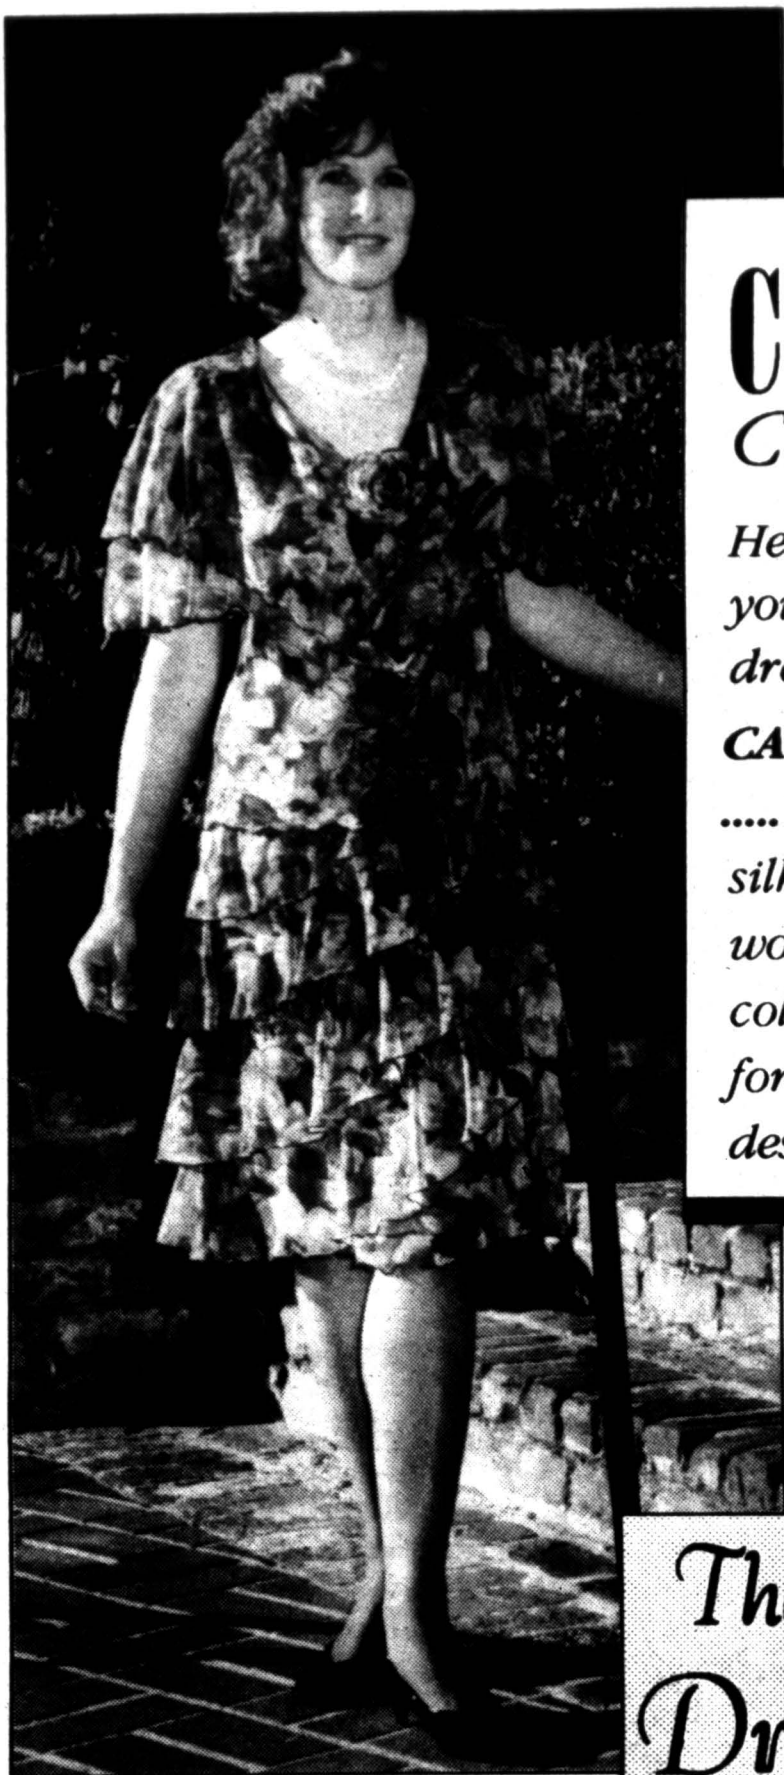

In addition, Farr said, people can write, fax or telephone their opinions about relevant issues. "We get a lot of phone calls, a lot of letters and a lot of visits, and we encourage them."

ment, plus the fact that these businesses are operating in the community. They're no different than any other business that requires a business license."

D'Ambrosio said Carmel police and traffic control will help enforce the new rules.

Could be 'devastating'

Carmel Business Association Executive Director Toni Jepson said the change in city policy is due, in part, to pressure from the business community. She said City Administrator Jere Kersnar and city staff attended a CBA meeting last October and heard testimony from local business owners who "told them how devastating it could be to businesses."

But Jepson isn't convinced changing the way the ordinance is enforced will ease the burden on business owners.

"I still don't think what they've done will make that much difference," Jepson told the Carmel Pine Cone this week. "My fear is that the tax could be the ruination of the uniqueness of Carmel."

According to Jepson, Carmel's business community prides itself in its small shops filled with quaint, unique items supplied by small cottage industries. Unfortunately, offering customers diversity requires small store owners to obtain merchandise from a variety of suppliers, which could get expensive, Jepson said.

"I think that charging anything is unreasonable," she added. "They (distributors) are adding to the economy by bringing in goods that contribute sales tax dollars. If all we have at the end are the big suppliers, we'll just be like another mall."

Merv Sutton, who owns Nielsen Bros. Market, agreed, noting his store has some 240 truck deliveries per month.

Sutton has been vocal in his opposition to enforcement of the 74-year-old ordinance. He said the uniqueness of the village should not be sacrificed for the projected $15,700 in city revenue.

"I didn't agree with it from the beginning," Sutton said.

"It penalizes all the little shops that bring in their own special trucks. If we all bought from one big supplier, everyone in the country would have the same merchandise."

Arguing that the ordinance hasn't been enforced for 40 years, Sutton said to begin doing it now - when business is at a three-year low - is ludicrous.

"We should be thinking of ways to stimulate business, not keep it away."

Sutton said the annual business license fee he pays for his market should cover delivery trucks. And he said it's going to cost the city to enforce the ordinance.

"It's just causing hard feelings," Sutton noted. "It's a pretty stupid thing. They (city staff) should've talked to members of the business community first."

AS EXTRADITION OF CRAIG MCFARLAND NEARS

Federal prosecutor predicts 'early guilty plea'

By JOHN DETRO

THE FEDERAL prosecutor who is responsible for trying the case predicts that Craig McFarland, former property developer and car collector from Pebble Beach, will plead guilty to charges that he bilked five banks out of more than $12 million.

And McFarland's extradition from Monaco has been ordered, with his return expected in January.

These statements came from U.S. Attorney William P. Keane of San Jose during a telephone interview with The Carmel Pine Cone.

Asked when the trial might commence, Keane replied: "I expect an early plea of guilty. I really can't say any more about it right now."

McFarland still was being held in the tiny European principality, where he was arrested by its Police Judiciare following a lengthy international hunt. His apprehension was announced Sept. 1 by the FBI's San Francisco office.

"Craig McFarland has been ordered extradited by authorities in Monaco," Keane said. "Now we are working out the logistics — the physical transport. We had expected he would be here the week of Christmas, but Monaco has no international airport. We must get him to Nice in the south of France."

Keane anticipated that McFarland would step onto California soil "the first or second week of January. He will be held part of the time at Santa Clara County Jail, and at the federal prison camp in Pleasanton."

Keane quoted McFarland's attorney — Michael Abbell of Washington, D.C. — as having said McFarland might re-

Early guilty plea predicted from McFarland as extradition nears quest bail. "This is an open question at the moment," Keane added. Abbell could not be reached for comment as deadline neared.

McFarland disappeared from family and creditors in the springtime of 1992, the FBI said. An arrest warrant was issued out of San Jose in December 1992, alleging multiple violations of U.S. banking laws.

Investigators said nearly $2 million was funneled into offshore banks in Bermuda, the Channel Islands (near Great Britain) and Switzerland. Efforts to recover these funds were ongoing.

The purported violations came to 16 counts against McFarland — 15 of making false statements to a federally insured financial institution, and one count of bank fraud. Each count carries a possible fine of $1 million and/or 30 years imprisonment, the FBI said.

"The scheme employed by McFarland," the FBI said, "was centered around the submission of personally prepared financial statements which he provided to the victim banks and in which he selectively excluded certain liabilities. The banks relied upon this false information and provided the lost funds to McFarland in response to his applications."

Horning, former CV Chamber board member, gets McPherson appointment

LAWYER AND community activist Linda Horning, a former Carmel Valley Chamber of Commerce board member, has been appointed Monterey district office field representative by 27th District Assemblyman Bruce McPherson.

At the same time, McPherson announced that community media figure and writer Michael Warren will fill the same job at the Santa Cruz district office.

Horning had been a Marina City

Council member since 1990, but resigned to accept the McPherson appointment. Along with serving the CV Chamber, she has been a board member for Monterey-Salinas Transit and Monterey Regional Waste Management.

"She has been very active in Republican Party activities both on the state and local level," the lawmaker's announcement said.

The Monterey district office will open Jan. 3.

dent of the association.

Traditionally, Greenwood explained, the board's officers are nominated by a nominating committee. But, he said, the association's bylaws provide an opportunity for any member to challenge the committee's decision with, at least, 15 petition signatures.

"This has never been done before," said Greenwood, who obtained 36 petition signatures from valley residents.

CVPOA has historically been dedicated to protecting and defending the beauty of the valley, Greenwood pointed out.

"Ferguson says he doesn't think we should make certain recommendations to the county regarding prospective developments," he added. "He has stated it's not the association's job — I think it is precisely our job."

For example, noted Greenwood, who also chairs the Carmel Valley Subdivision Evaluation Committee, when the Veeder Ranch development was submitted for evaluation, the committee recommended limitations for the houses on one-acre lots.

At a later CVPOA meeting, Greenwood recalled, "The chief person against limits for the Veeder subdivision was Ferguson. He said, 'It's none of our business.'"

The anti-watchdog approach to development matters in Carmel Valley has rallied, not only Greenwood, but several longtime valley residents into action.

Max Chaplin, CVPOA past president, and Jerry Foote, county planning commissioner, have sent letters to local newspapers stating their disenchantment with CVPOA's latest trend.

Chaplin's letter cites the loss of representation for valley residents on the board of supervisors and the county planning commission as leading factors in pursuing a more strident effort to "protect those values for which CVPOA has always stood for."

In her letter, Foote supports Greenwood as the candidate who will provide the best opportunity to "strengthen the board" and "protect and defend the valley we love."

Responding to CVPOA's recent reluctance to "protect and defend" the valley's integrity, Greenwood has targeted Ferguson as the main offender.

Ferguson, despite his resentment toward airing his and Greenwood's differences publicly, does not deny his reticence in telling the county how to do its job with regard to development in Carmel Valley.

"Greenwood feels CVPOA should police land-use regulations," said Ferguson, a retired engineer who bought property in Carmel Valley in 1975 and moved here nine years ago.

Dictating what size home a developer can build on one acre is "none of CVPOA's business," Ferguson said. "I think growth in the valley is inevitable. But it can be managed. The 'I'm here, close the gate' syndrome is not realistic."

In a similar posture, Ferguson, like Greenwood, supports CVPOA's doctrine to preserve the natural beauty and resources of Carmel Valley. But, Ferguson would like to see more consideration given to the property rights of residents.

"I respect Bob Greenwood," he said. "But CVPOA is not a branch of the Sierra Club. Protect and defend are pretty strong words — I'd rather say inform and assist."

Area real estate boards form alliance

An alliance of 17 real estate boards/associations in the bay area was formed this month to serve 13,000 Realtor members. This alliance represents Monterey, San Benito, Santa Cruz, San Mateo and Santa Clara counties. The Realtors in Monterey County will be online with the new system by March 1995.

The computer system operated by this new alliance will be the largest online Multiple Listing Service network in California and one of the largest in the country.

Real estate professionals affiliated with any of the 17 associations will be able to call into the Tandem mainframe computer via modem and computer and access information on more than 20,000 real estate properties for sale.

To assist buyers in the process of finding properties, agents will be able to view and print digitized photographs of the listings.

"Buyers will be able to narrow their house hunting by viewing the property on the computer," said Jeff Davi, 1993 chairman of the Monterey County Regional Multiple Listing Service.

SCRAMP elects 1994 officers

The Sports Car Racing Association of Monterey Peninsula (SCRAMP) has announced the election of its 1994 officers.

Richard Lee of Carmel Valley was elected for a third term as president. Other appointments include Kathy Hayworth of Monterey, vice president; Bill Reichmuth of Pebble Beach; treasurer; Jeff Silveira of Pacific Grove, secretary.

SCRAMP is a non-profit organization that operates Laguna Seca Raceway and is comprised of 25 volunteer directors. Since its inception in 1957, SCRAMP has donated more than $5 million to charities of the greater Monterey County area.

The Personnel Office appoints James Carroll, Debbie Loveless

Jill Russell, founding director of The Personnel Office (TPO), located in Carmel, recently appointed James Carroll as associate director, and Debbie Loveless as personnel assistant.

Carroll is accredited as a senior professional of human resources by the national Human Resources Certification Institute and has more than 12 years of human resources experience in the financial and agricultural industries.

Loveless has previous experience with KPMG Peat Marwick in Washington D.C., and with the human resources department of the Monterey Bay Aquarium.

MacLaughlin awarded Certified Residential Specialist designation

Myrle MacLaughlin, a Carmel Realtor, has been awarded the Certified Residential Specialist (CRS) designation by the Residential Sales Council of the Realtors National Marketing Institute, an affiliate of the National Association of Realtors.

MYRLE MACLAUGHLIN

MacLaughlin received the designation at the annual meeting of the Residential Sales Council in Miami. She is a Realtor with Fox & Carskadon in Carmel and a member of the Carmel Association of Realtors. MacLaughlin has been active in the Realtor/Salvation Army Christmas CanTree food collection program for many years, and is a regular donor in the Community Hospital of the Monterey Peninsula American Red Cross Blood Program.

Myron McFarland, Clay Larson named to MIIS Deans' Council

Myron McFarland, member of the Monterey Institute board of directors, and Clayton Larson, president of the holding company of Pacific Bancorp and vice president of First National Bank of Central California, have been named chairs of the Monterey Institute of International Studies (MIIS) Deans' Council.

McFarland, chairman emeritus of McFarland Companies, is a past president of the Monterey Winegrowers Council, California Almond Growers Council and World Affairs Council for the Monterey Bay Area.

Larson also is a member of the Monterey Institute board and has served as a board member of Pacheco Club, Community Hospital of Monterey Peninsula Community Foundation, and All Saints' Episcopal Day School. He also serves as an advisor for Leadership Monterey Peninsula and Legal Services for Seniors.

THANK YOU CARMEL for your encouragement and support as we continue our struggle for justice at the Marriott Bar & Restaurant at Pine Inn.

Last month, after being fired from our jobs of many years, Carmel locals signed petitions and have continued to BOYCOTT the Marriott Bar & Restaurant at the Pine Inn.

Additionally, community members have donated funds to help our families celebrate the holiday season. For this we are eternally grateful.

Through your support, Carmel has proven to be an advocate for social justice and fairness. We have taken on a Goliath in corporate America but with your involvement our voices shall be heard.

You can continue to support our cause by making donations to:

Freeway's next chapter set for Jan. 12

TAMC to meet again following Caltrans' opposition of widening

HERE'S ONE way to view the situation: Individuals born when Hatton Canyon Freeway first was proposed are 38 years old today.

And the verbal ping pong just goes on and on. The next chapter will be written Jan. 12. Transportation Agency of Monterey County (TAMC) will meet that Wednesday to continue discussion of competing plans.

Foremost in members' minds may well be the stand taken by the state — Caltrans, in a word — at their session of Dec. 22.

At that time, a spokesman for Caltrans — Patrick

CVPOA president says 'complaints are vague'

CVPOA President Roger Williams is surprised by the backlash against the current board's members. He said the board has shown a "remarkable unanimity" during the past year. He noted the letters in the newspapers are vague and "seem to relate to their agendas, not ours."

Responding to complaints that CVPOA is not doing enough to prevent growth in Carmel Valley, Williams said it can't be done.

"There will be managed growth," Williams said. "But it will be based on the Carmel Valley Master Plan, which we have never strayed from and never intend to."

Connally — said the agency will oppose the county-proposed widening of Highway 1 at Carmel with tunnels underneath. His bottom line: Caltrans will recommend the State Transportation Commission undertake the freeway project ($43 million) and spend zero dollars on the widening alternative.

Connally admitted the Army Corps of Engineers still must be convinced the freeway work would not run roughshod over the environment.

It has been estimated the project would destroy 12 acres of wetlands near Carmel River and 21 acres of pine forests.

The State Transportation Commission will meet on Jan. 20 — another opportunity for passionate comments to be made. The commission already has committed the freeway funds.

Big Sur girl is winning the battle of her young life little girl whose only visit to a doctor was for shots in the first grade.

But something did happen. On the morning of Sept. 18, as Noelle dressed for a soccer game at a friend's house, she collapsed. She told her friend her head ached and then she started to fitfully thrash about.

When her father arrived, he found Noelle asleep. He shook her until her eyes opened, Alan painfully remembered.

"It's daddy," he said, as she stared back with the most stunned, frightened look he had ever experienced. "She couldn't talk and her right side was paralyzed. I thought, 'I better pray.'"

Noelle had suffered a severe stroke.

Rare stroke

Within 24 hours, Noelle was transferred from the Community Hospital of the Monterey Peninsula to UCSF Medical Center in San Francisco. Alan and Nancy never left her alone.

Noelle's type of stroke is very rare, the Perlmutter were told by the pediatric neurosurgeon who treated their daughter. Noelle's doctor determined the impetus for her stroke happened at a soccer practice the evening before the game. Noelle had been hit in the head with a soccer ball. She sat out part of the game but didn't feel bad and got back in. However, when her head had snapped back upon contact with the ball, a blood clot had begun to form.

"It could have killed her," Alan said quietly. "The doctors didn't say it, but she's alive because she's so full of life and ready to go."

Noelle remembers throwing up all the way from Big Sur to the hospital but doesn't remember being scared. "I didn't think of anything," she said.

Her mother remembers every detail down to the clocks in each room of the hospital ticking away as she waited, terrified in a "time warp" until she heard the news that her daughter was out of danger.

Noelle spent the next six weeks at UC Mount Zion for occupational therapy with Nancy sleeping in her room and Alan staying at an adjacent facility.

"It's extremely helpful to be right there for support," said Nancy, who is a social worker and family therapist. "Some of the other children, whose parents did not stay, cried themselves to sleep."

It's typical for children in these types of situations, she added, to become depressed. If that happens, she noted, the therapist can't do anything.

But Noelle has a history of optimism

and enthusiasm — she was one of the youngest runners to complete the 5K Big Sur Marathon, she's a member of Big Sur's Little Theater, the Aikido Club and Brownie Troop No. 2012. She dances, plays the violin, sings, and, of course, she plays in the YMCA soccer league.

Her high spirit, along with the support of family and friends, have driven her to a remarkable recovery.

Her first big break came after a swimming therapy session. Noelle got out of the pool and tried to raise her right arm, which hadn't moved before. This time, however, she lifted it straight up. In her wheelchair, she raced to tell her father.

"I thought my arm would never move again," Noelle recalled.

Alan and Nancy are hoping for a 98 percent recovery for Noelle within the next six months to a year.

"We've had so much support and caring from the community," Nancy said. "It's overwhelming. And Noelle has so much energy. Her mental activity and enthusiasm is far ahead of her ability — but not for long."

As for Noelle, she plans to run in the Big Sur Marathon 5K next year. She said the important thing to remember is to "keep on trying."

Randazzo says land use depends on 'what community is willing to support'

Carmel Valley Recreational Park District, said the district has recommended the formation of a committee to research the possibility of purchasing the 30-acre property.

If and when a committee is formed, Randazzo said, several public meetings would be held to determine what kind of interest the community has in the airport, which is located north of Carmel Valley Village.

Randazzo said one option the valley's park district could implement is a nine-hole golf course.

"It's possible," he said. "There's enough land. It depends entirely on what the community is willing to support."

Development zoning

Peter and Mary Delfino, owners of the airfield for more than 40 years, are now actively looking for a buyer, even though it has quietly been for sale for several years, Randazzo said.

The zoning for the airport allows for development of 30 single-family homes, visitor-serving accommodations — such as a hotel or recreational vehicle park — or public open space.

But, Randazzo noted, there are several restrictions related to building at the site — such as providing a septic system and density — that would be challenging for any prospective buyer.

"It will be a cold day in hell before anyone will come along with enough bucks and time to sit around waiting to jump through the hoops to develop the property," Randazzo said.

Originally, in 1941, the airfield was called the Airway Ranch. The owners, Byington and Tyrey Ford, attempted to entice aviators to purchase residential lots on the edge of the macadam strip.

Today, more than a dozen pilots park their airplanes at the airport, including Lou Allaire, insurance agent and longtime manager of the airfield.

About a year ago, the pilots started paying a small monthly fee for maintaining the property, said Allaire, who considers mowing the airport lawn a hobby.

"I like seeing the airport there," he said. "For years, there has never been any change. The airport group has always kept a low profile."

Allaire, along with several other local residents, approached the local park district, as well as the Monterey Peninsula Regional Park District, about the possibility of purchasing the property.

Cary Tate, regional park district manager, said no funding is available at this time for buying the airport. But, he added, the regional park district would like to assist the Carmel Valley park district in their effort to pursue the option of preserving the airport as open space.

Doris Day's Best Friends

By DORIS DAY

A time to live...

AND A time to die. It's absolute agony to lose a Best Friend. I know - because I've just lost my beloved Chipper. You'd think that after saying goodbye to so many dogs and cats through the years I would be more accepting of this experience, that it would be easier to grieve the loss, but that just isn't so. Each one holds a very special place in my heart and right now I feel as if my heart will break.

However, there are other little angels in my household who look at me with sad eyes and wonder what's wrong. They still want to be fed, and walked, and played with, and they need to know that they each hold a very special place in my heart. They will help me heal, and as the days go by, the sadness will subside and the emptiness will again be filled by the very special love and devotion of my Best Friends.

Resolutions

Have you made your New Year's resolutions yet? I have, and, as always, they reflect my hope of making this world a better place for all the two-leggers and four-leggers who share it.

My Pet Foundation continues working hard to educate about the importance of spaying and neutering and the Doris Day Animal League has made a tremendous impact on the legislative front. I'm extremely proud of these organizations and the difference they have made in the lives of millions of animals.

You can be a part of all this by remembering that kindness begins at home. Teach your children to love and respect our Best Friends by being responsible pet owners. Here are a few suggestions:

- Make sure your pets are all spayed or neutered. Many common cancers can be prevented by spaying and neutering. On a larger scale, there simply aren't enough homes and that's why animal shelters destroy millions of pets each year. Dogs and cats, puppies and kittens die each day while more and more are being born. Do your part. Break the cycle. Spay or neuter!

- A collar and ID tag can reunite you with your lost pet. No matter how careful we are, gates or doors are inevitably left open and that precious doggy or kitty-cat can be lost forever without proper identification.

- Be a good neighbor. Set an example for others to follow by socializing and training your pets to be model citizens. That means no excessive barking and no unrestricted roaming through the neighborhood.

- Set aside some time each day to spend with your pets. I think we often take them for granted because of the busy lives we lead. A pat on the head just isn't enough. Walk your dogs, cuddle your cats, groom them, talk to them, play with them, make them a part of your life.

Happy New Year!

(Written in collaboration with Judy Ruby, Director, Doris Day Pet Foundation)

1993: THE YEAR IN REVIEW

The 'Top 12' stories from the past 12 months

AS WE usher 1993 out and ring in 1994, we have tried to encapsulate the year by ranking the top stories:

1. Panetta's DC departure creates local political domino effect.

It was clearly "The Year of Elections" on the Monterey Peninsula as some voters traipsed to the booth as many as six times during 1993.

No one development shaped this trend as did Leon Panetta's departure to Washington, DC to become President Clinton's director of the Office of Management and Budget. That opened up the 17th Congressional District slot, which attracted no fewer than 26 candidates for the April 13 primary.

Democrat Sam Farr — the area's reigning assemblyman from the 27th District — fought back stiff challenges from Monterey County Supervisor Barbara Shipnuck and local attorney Bill Monning to join Republican Bill McCampbell, who ran unsuccessfully against Panetta in November 1992, in the June 8 runoff.

Though it was not as convincing as some had expected, Farr defeated McCampbell in the bid to become Panetta's successor. While one vacant seat was filled, another — Farr's assembly post — was now vacant.

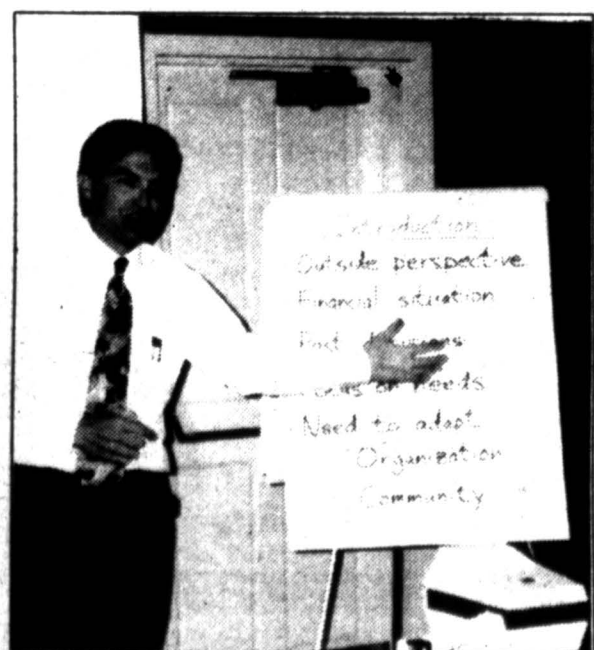

Another flock of candidates vied for the Assembly seat, with Republican Bruce McPherson and Democrat Gary Patton — both from Santa Cruz — standing after the Aug. 31 primary.

In what some considered an upset, McPherson, a former newspaper editor, knocked off Patton on Nov. 2 to give the 17th District its first Republican representative in years.

2. New city administrator tries to steer Carmel clear of budget woes.

Jere Kersnar came to Carmel in March from Cathedral City, Calif., where the recession had hit hard. Kersnar had no choice but to exercise "downsizing" there, and was brought to Carmel with the same fiscally conservative mentality.

At the time of his hiring, he said, "I will never recommend a budget that is unbalanced." Kersnar has lived up to his billing. In his "State of the City" message in May, Kersnar said spending must be reduced — regardless of how successful it may be in finding new revenue sources. And he has sought to do so. Grappling with its second year of employee cuts, the Carmel City Council spared three of the seven city positions proposed for elimination in Kersnar's $7.1 million 1993-94 budget. Plus, the Carmel Recreation Department was saved.

To restore the positions, the council had to strike Kersnar's proposal for an across-the-board 4 percent pay raise to all city employees. Kersnar budgeted the raise to begin remedying what he views as a lack of competitive salaries paid to Carmel-by-the-Sea employees. A profound example of that was longtime Carmel policeman Fay Patterson's departure from the city force for a comparable, higher-paying position in Salinas.

While Kersnar's proposed elixir has not always been well received, it has been well intentioned and well thought out.

3. "Super" was just one way to describe the Karas-Davi supervisors' duel.

One should have known from the outset that something was going to be different about the 1993 Monterey County Supervisors' races. First of all, the new redistricting map altered the regional identities of the five districts, particularly District 5, which took on an enormous area.

The fallout started immediately — Sam Karas, incumbent 4th District supervisor now lived in District 5. That set up the likelihood of an intriguing race between two incumbents: Karas and Karin Strasser Kauffman, 5th District supervisor.

But that drama was short-lived as Strasser Kauffman announced on March 4 that she was pulling out of the race. Six candidates pushed forward — Karas clearly the front-runner — to the June 8 primary.

While Karas emerged as the top vote-getter, he was not the story of the night. Instead, the spotlight belonged to Jeff Davi, a Monterey Realtor, who surprised the pundits by finishing second, ousting Fran Farina, Monterey Peninsula Water Management District director.

The Karas-Davi race was a classic matchup from the outset — the 71-year-old incumbent versus the 25-year-old upstart. Nobody was disappointed along the way. Like two prize fighters, they bobbed and weaved their way to the Aug. 3 election.

Incredibly, after more than 18,000

SAM KARAS (standing) and Jeff Davi slugged it out in an incredibly close Monterey County supervisors' race.

ballots were counted, Karas topped Davi by a mere 10 votes. A later recount pushed the final margin to 17 votes, but clearly the Karas-Davi battle was one for the ages.

4. Hatton Canyon debate, Year 38 — a final decision gets closer.

This story has a life of its own. As we mention on page 9 of this issue, in a story on the latest chapter of the freeway debate, an individual born at the time the Hatton Canyon freeway was first proposed would be 38 years old today. Now, as we look ahead to 1994, the state Department of Transportation has given its ultimatum — it's the freeway or no way.

If the $43 million freeway project is not feasible, and there are numerous environmental hurdles still looming, Caltrans has said it will recommend nothing beyond minor improvements at the mouth of Carmel Valley. A number of alternatives were unveiled during the year — including a county-proposed widening plan — but the deadlock, not to mention the debate, has continued.

Although many have said they might not see a resolution to the Hatton Canyon freeway debate in their lifetimes, there is some reason for hope that 1994 may bring a resolution.

5. "H" stands for heated as in Carmel's raging Measure H debate. It was a far cry from a mandate. Measure H, the controversial rezoning proposal on the June 8 ballot, was approved by Carmel voters by the slimmest of margins — 10 votes. The final percentage margin was 50.2 to 49.7, or 1,099 votes to 1,089 votes. Despite the unwieldy nature of the legislation, it was of little surprise that the commercial rezoning proposal brought out an impressive number of voters — 56.3 percent of those registered in the city.

Not only did the rezoning issue divide sides, but fuel was added to the fire when former mayor and Measure H supporter Clint Eastwood directed more than $40,000 to the yes campaign.

Neither side was jovial in the wake of the vote, however. Mayor Ken White, a Measure H backer, could only chuckle when someone called the verdict a "mandate." Carmel Councilwoman Barbara Brooks said, "When you have a bloody battle and it winds up that close, I don't think you have settled anything. In a way, we are at the same place we were before the election." And Beth Wright, president of the Carmel Residents Association, which was strongly in opposition to Measure H, went so far as to call it "a moral victory for us."

6. Arson fire ravages CHS wing; sentencing stirs emotions.

At about 5 a.m. Sunday, June 13, Carmel High School Principal Marie Ishida was rudely awakened with the news that the school's science wing was on fire.

School officials would later learn that three 17-year-old CHS students were behind the $750,000 blaze after they were arrested July 20 following a two-week crime spree that included arson, auto theft and vandalism. Two of the three youths confessed to the crimes in interviews following their arrests.

Arson fire, Polly, Sunset Center grab headlines

The effects of the act are still being felt on the CHS campus, as students and staff deal with makeshift facilities and the ongoing construction effort to rebuild the damaged wing.

The youths, who earlier had entered guilty pleas in connection with the fire, faced Monterey County Superior Court Judge John Anton Dec. 1. Anton ordered two of the three juveniles to serve 150 days in Monterey County Juvenile Hall, one of whom will serve an additional 200 days in house arrest following his release. The third teen-ager will be housed in a group home, possibly until he turns 19 years old.

CHS administrators and staff were notably disappointed with the judge's decision, considering the boys could have received a maximum sentence of five years, eight months in a California Youth Authority facility.

7. A Petaluma girl's kidnapping, murder grips locals.

The dateline on this story might have read "Petaluma," but it would have been hard to find one person here who wasn't deeply moved by the kidnapping and murder of 12-year-old Polly Klaas.

It's certainly true we had our local angle — both sets of grandparents live on the peninsula — but the reality of the tragic case managed to strike a chord with just about everyone. Polly Klaas became a household name during the massive nationwide search that commenced in early October.

She later became a symbol for all that's wrong with the system when it was learned she was murdered and the suspect in the case had logged a significant criminal record.

From this story, it should not be forgotten that several people on a local level — chiefly Becky Hunter of Pebble Beach — stepped forward to help even though they had no knowledge of the Klaas family. It was about people helping people, and there is reason to believe some positive fallout may emerge from an otherwise horribly tragic story.

8. Portland architectural firm guides Sunset Center renovation.

It was a moment many Carmelites — in particular, the Sunset Center Renovation Task Force — had hoped they would see. The Carmel City Council on Nov. 4 enthusiastically received the "final conceptual design" report from BOOR/A, the Portland, Ore.-based architectural firm that performed the initial work on the proposed renovation of Sunset Center.

The viability of the center's renovation now rides on the ability of a new non-profit, fund-raising corporation to raise the necessary money — a definite challenge, indeed, considering the project is estimated to cost between $10 million and $12 million.

That is a story for 1994, but the important role played by Bud Oringdolph, principal member of Broome, Oringdolph, O'Toole, Rudolf, Boles and Associates (hence, the acronym BOOR/A) will be remembered. Spearheaded by Oringdolph, BOOR/A was a class act through and through during its work on the $30,000 initial phase.

Certainly, the firm was hoping to make a grand impression in hopes it will land the big contract, but a venture of this nature needs city council consensus and citizen resolve. Oringdolph and his firm helped build the dream's first steps.

9. Large Carmel jewelry heist pits store owners vs. police.

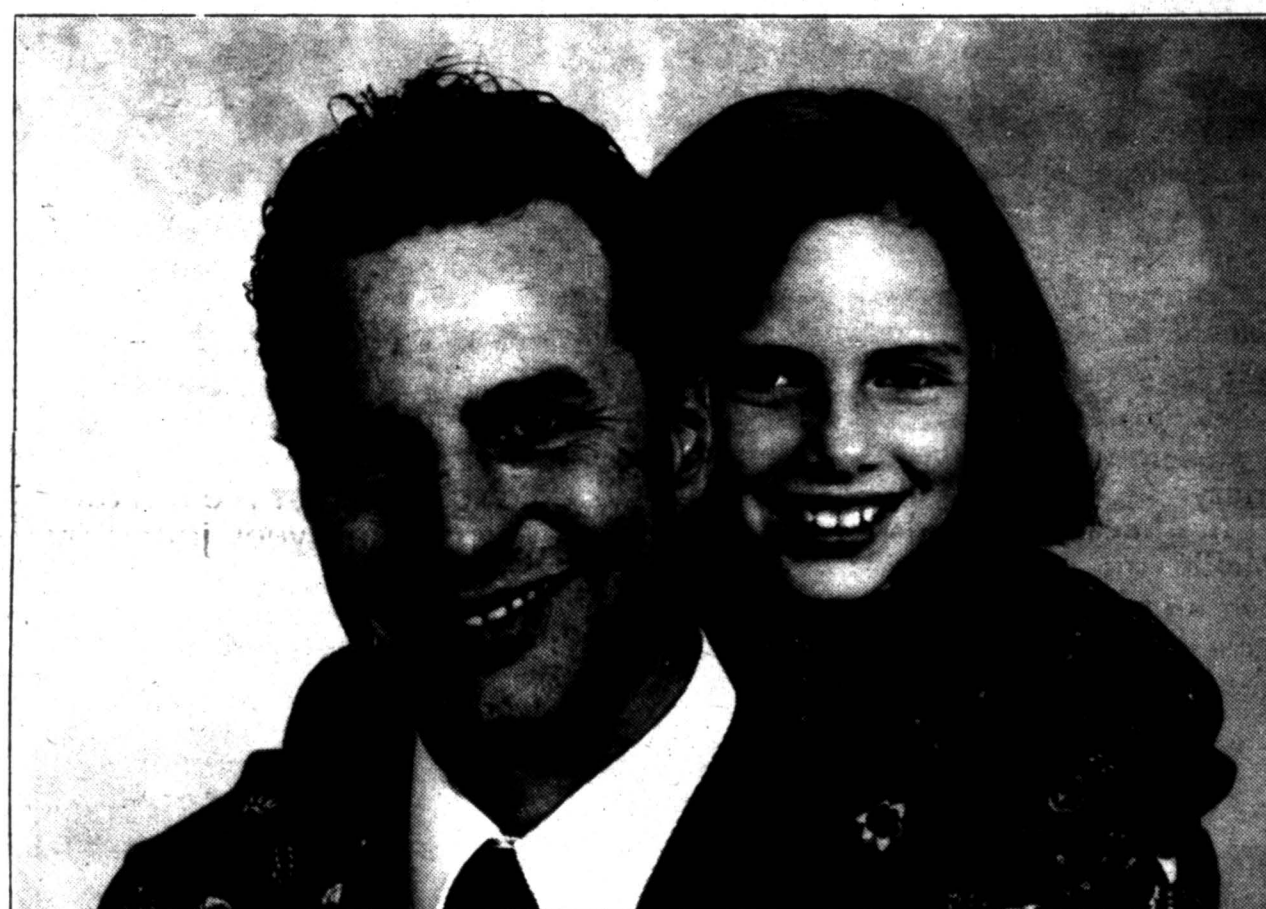

Carmel police took the heat following the Oct. 26 armed robbery of Kerry Lee, Inc., a local jewelry store.

Police maintained they followed proper procedure, while owner Kerry Lee Johnson charged they were negligent for allowing the gunman to escape with $500,000 in jewelry. The suspect is still at large.

In an Oct. 31 letter directed to Carmel Mayor Ken White and city council members, Johnson lashed out at police for their performance during the robbery and called for a "full-scale investigation" into the matter.

Meanwhile, Johnson's insurance carrier has filed a claim against the City of Carmel, charging "the city didn't follow proper procedures in relation to their response to the robbery." Jewelers Mutual, a Wisconsin-based insurance company, will seek $300,000 in damages for the wholesale value of the jewelry taken during the heist, according to Johnson.

The incident, which prompted a meeting between local jewelers and police, highlighted the concerns of local business owners about their level of police protection in the village.

POLLY KLAAS, whose grandparents live locally, is pictured with father Marc.

10. Rancho San Carlos plan moves ahead; water prospects good.

From water life springs eternal.

And for members of the Rancho San Carlos land-management team, the essence of their livelihood was solidified with the announcement this year that several test wells were pumping a steady flow of water up from the depths of the almost 20,000-acre spread in Carmel Valley.

In the face of adversity — a drought lingered on the Monterey Peninsula for years — water was the key factor concerning the proposed subdivision development for the ranch.

Although the Rancho San Carlos team hurdled its first challenge when county supervisors approved a 1-40 land-use designation — without its own water supply — Rancho San Carlos, considered by some to be the largest land development proposal in the country — would likely become a sleeping white elephant.

The ranch's management team breathed a sigh of relief when the test wells determined a continuous supply of water could be maintained for the development project.

However, the respite was brief, and the Rancho San Carlos team is once again gearing up for the expected controversy when it files a formal application with the county next year.

11. Long standing Pine Inn dining room employees jolted by Marriott.

If anything could mark in one's mind the commonly referred to "uniqueness" of Carmel, nothing may have expressed it more clearly than this year's shakedown at the historic

Pine Inn Hotel.

When Marriott Management Services took over the dining room facility of the 104-year-old Pine Inn, it severed a long standing tradition for many residents in Carmel, who dined there regularly throughout the years.

In one bold stroke, Marriott chose not to rehire most of the longtime employees, some of whom had worked for the establishment for almost four decades and were the very reason residents, and visitors as well, returned to the Pine Inn year after year.

And the community responded. About 200 local residents attended a candlelight vigil at the Pine Inn to demonstrate their dismay at Marriott's action.

Mayor Ken White could not recall a time when so many people gathered to show support for a cause. Several groups and organizations cancelled ongoing meetings and parties to reinforce their message to Marriott: The corporate stance is inappropriate for Carmel.

12. All is "forgiven" — Clint finally takes home an Oscar.

Though Unforgiven hit the theaters in 1992, it made big news in 1993 as it was named best picture by the Academy and Carmel's Clint Eastwood took home the best director's statuette. Never before had Eastwood claimed a personal Oscar. He also was nominated as best actor, but the prize went to Al Pacino for Scent of a Woman.

Even during the Oscar telecast, Eastwood drew plenty of attention as host Billy Crystal introduced him and mentioned Unforgiven anti-hero William Munny. "Clint used the same ruthless tactics when he cleaned up Carmel," Crystal quipped. "There was Dodge, Tombstone and Carmel."

Of his best director award, Eastwood said, "This is all right. I've been around 39 years and I've been very lucky... The trouble with living this long, I know so many people that I can't remember all the names."

Eastwood enjoyed more success later this year as the film In the Line of Fire won him critical acclaim.

Carmel Police fund raiser nets $1,500 for Youth Center

THE CARMEL Youth Center has a brand new pool table, thanks to a $1,500 donation from the Carmel Police Officers Association.

According to CPOA President Terry Chandler, a senior officer with the Carmel Police Department, about $4,500 was raised at a country western concert held last February at Sunset Center.

Chandler said proceeds benefited the city's Drug Awareness Resistance Education (D.A.R.E.) program, Seniors Helping Seniors Network, and the Carmel Youth Center.

CYC Director Pat Lenz said the decision on how the $1,500 would be spent was made largely by the kids:

"The kids said they wanted a pool table," Lenz said. "You come here after school and it's a big fight to see who gets to the tables first."

According to Lenz, the other two pool tables at the youth center are more than 80 years old. He said a pool tournament is slated for 12:30 p.m. today at the youth center.

Social Spotlight

By SUSAN CANTRELL

Backward, onward and upward...

ONE BIG thrust and we break through the sickening smog over San Jose.

I'm flying Reno Air for the first time. I did my Christmas shopping and found them to be the best deal around. They fly out of San Jose and not only are their snow-capped peaks on the tails of their planes creative, the hostess announces all the flight safety rigmarole in the form of the "Twas the Night Before Christmas" poem. When she's done we all applaud.

I'm served complimentary La Croix sparkling water. This is class, even though I'm in coach.

To my right California's Sierras are dusted with snow. I'm headed for Seattle, where I'll rent a car and drive two hours north to be with my family for Christmas.

Every family has its Scrooge and Dad was ours. I miss him terribly on this first Christmas since he died. I remember how he'd let me squeeze his hand so hard it left nail marks whenever we took off on a jet...

Three Sisters, Shasta, Mt. Rushmore (or one of those peaks) is poking its white cloaken head above the clouds now. I never cease feeling a little amazed at these natural creations.

By the way, I'm typing this on my little black portable computer. I've had it just two months and already the keypad letters are wearing off. No one notices me. It's become common to take PC's flying. One day I suppose we'll all be wired for sound and need only to think a thought to transmit a message.

At any rate, snow spreads white patches on parched hills, making funny faces with bright blue eyes (lakes) on them...

I'm thinking about the New Year, and how to become more loving to myself and others; how sometimes our best intentions aren't loving to someone else; how genuine love is accepting people exactly as they are. And how hard that is. How hard it is to reach around our own needs and biases to embrace others.

Robert Fulgham, the author of "Everything I Know I Learned in Kindergarten," has a handle on this. Guess I'll read it again. For now, "The Bridges of Madison County" is burning a hole in my computer case...

Winter solstice is happening as I write this. And I've noticed that this time of year always brings out the best and worst in people: showdowns in check-out lines and on highways; family feuds; starvation.

When I choose to concentrate on the good things, I go around handing out cheap little presents right and left, insisting people open them there on the spot so as to extend Christmas.

...I ruminate about some of the best soirees I've attended in '93. It's hard to choose. Sometimes the smallest, least expensive party is the most memorable when it has just the right ingredients: a good cause, good company, good food and a good flight path.

...I fly...I think... Beneath me is a huge frozen lake. It reminds me of ice skating in Rochester, Minnesota when I was a little girl and how I used to wait at rinkside, freezing and crying for Mom to pick me up after skating lessons. Sure glad I live in Monterey County, where our snow-capped peaks ride in on waves.

But I digress... The most memorable little soiree was probably the Bach Festival Opening Night Gala in July. It was a first and very well done. The Carmel Women's Club was festooned with banners and wonderful potted plants and Maestro Bruno Weil had never been so pleased with a performance.

(Crater Lake crops up like God's teardrop, reflecting its snowy banks.)

Then there was Chartwell's Triple Crown, where we hooted and hollered and bet on the horse races shown on screens at the Turf Club.

Jerry Van Dyke was a scream at the John XIII AIDS Ministry benefit at the Monterey Marriott in September; and the Del Monte Kennel Club's dog show at the Lodge at Pebble Beach was a howl.

Of course, the Councours d'Elegance was splendid and had some competition with new automotive events that weekend.

It would be hard to choose between Virginia Stanton's birthday blowout and Doris Day's for the most galactic affair. Stanton had Bob and Dolores Hope at her party, but Day had Suzanne Somers and Loni Anderson at hers. Na na na n-a-a-a na!

Come to think of it, Macy's Great Caper, a fund raiser for the American Diabetes Association, in March, was a blast. Men in penguin suits and women in beaded gowns ran amuck through Macy's, looking for clues to lead them to great prizes. And we dined among the Liz Claibornes and Ralph Laurens.

And let's not forget LifeSavers for Youth's Western Extravaganza, in May, under a tent at the Inn at Spanish Bay, where Rita Coolidge and Kris Kristofferson crooned their hearts out.

(Ski slopes below are mapped out like a patchwork quilt.)

The Monterey County Film Commission's Dennis

the Menace Preview Party last spring was a gas too. Hank Ketcham signed autographs and adults joined kids as they grazed from soda stands to hot dogs and ice cream. And we ended with the hilarious movie while exhausted parents snoozed in their seats.

Two more special soirees that come to mind are: The Junior League of Monterey County's Top Hat and Pearls and Leadership Monterey Peninsula's Wicked Night of Chance. They had all the right ingredients, including little details like gardenias for each guest; no windy speeches; and activities to keep us busy.

I feel guilty singling out certain soirees because I've attended dozens more this year and I appreciate the hours and hours of volunteer labor that goes into even the least successful events.

It's not easy raising money in Monterey County with 500 non-profit organizations competing for dollars. This is not to say there is no cooperation between some organizations. But my New Year's wish is that in 1994, every agency will see how it relates to the whole network, and that by working together our community will best be served.

I have a suggestion: why don't more agencies plan their events during the week? Or on "off" weekends? (There are precious few, I know...) A Feast for AIDS is always held on Sunday nights and I don't see them hurting for attendance.

If you have ideas, let me know. I'd like to pass the word along.

Thank you for reading this column and best wishes for a fulfilling new year!

P.S. At this writing, I have landed safely in the North Country. Mount Baker is resplendent in snow and the cold sky is marbled with pastel pinks all day long. Mom has paid no attention to the death sentences her doctors mandated. She's living optimistically and gracefully with her cancer. I'm watching a committee of chickadees outside the window, pecking at seed scattered on the frosty ground.

Yesterday I found a one-dollar store, bought 30 presents for Mom, and had to wrap them all. We're going to Christmas at my older sister's. My younger sister and I are bringing viruses along with presents. It should be the best Christmas ever...

Speaking of grace...

I spoke with Joe Klaas the other day. He said some things about his granddaughter I will pass along:

"If this were the Medieval Ages she'd be canonized," he said. As a result of her abduction, a computerized program was developed that will now disseminate photos and information at the speed of light.

And, if parents learned nothing else from this tragedy that brought the national problem of child abduction into clarity, they have learned to hold onto their children's hands.

"Petaluma people were already close," Klaas said.

Joe and the family were to gather for Christmas, even though they decided not to light the decorations outside the house. And, perhaps, they will have found some happy memories amidst the pain. Such as: Joe's forays with Polly for fish 'n' chips; her comments, "That's neat!" each time he'd recite from the "Tailor of Glouchester"; and the witty notes she'd pass to friends in class.

For years, Joe has visited Soledad prisoners at Christmas time, sharing his experience, strength and hope in support groups. This year he was asked not to because of all the publicity he has engendered.

"They said they'd have to lower me by helicopter," he joked.

I hope he went anyway.

We're all looking for someone to lead us out of the darkness. And Joe is just that kind of a guy...

Valuing the family

AS MY family sat around the Christmas tree last Saturday, I realized it's not often that we get to spend much quality time together. My dad works constantly, and I hardly ever have the time to hang around with my brother. Our usual family meeting time is Sunday night, when we all have dinner together.

When I look around at my friends, I see that many of them are frequently away from home. They stay at friends' houses or take trips, and rarely if ever see their families. While there are certainly many interesting things to go do while one is in high school, I know that many of these people will someday regret not having spent more time at home during these years.

Soon, I will be gone. College looms in the near future, and if I go out of state, I'll be lucky to get back three or four times a year. When I think of this, it makes me sad. It seems I have often taken my time with my family for granted. I'm seldom at home these days — either I'm at a basketball game or hanging out with my friends. It seems there's always something more important to do.

I have a feeling I'm not the only one who takes his or her family for granted. How often do you spend time with mom and dad, or your brothers or sisters? No matter how old or young a person is, family should be important. These are the people we can go to when we have problems, the ones who help us when we are in trouble.

What we make of it

I know that no matter how much time I spend with my mom and dad and my brother, I will wish I had spent more when I am older. Our life and our memories are what we make them. It is up to each individual to use the time we are given here on Earth in the best way possible.

While I know there are many things I want to see and experience in this world, I won't ever forget my family. I hope I'll never be too busy for a talk with my mom, or to have dinner with my dad. I hope I can always find time to goof around with my brother.

So now it's that time of year when we make resolutions for the new year that's about to begin, and I think I have a good one for myself, and anyone else for that matter: Spend more time with my family, and try not to take it for granted.

Hopefully I'll be able to live up to it.

Oliver Pappas chosen CHS Student of the Month

OLIVER PAPPAS, a senior at Carmel High School, has been selected as the December Student of the Month by the mathematics department.

"I was kind of surprised," Pappas said. "I've never been student of the month before. Being nominated by the math department is pretty neat."

Last year, Pappas was one of three Monterey County winners in a chemistry competition held at San Jose State University, and also received the Bausch and Lomb Honorary Science Award.

In addition to Pappas' high academic achievement, his artistic ability is notable. For the last two years, Pappas has captured first place in a Monterey County Fair competition for sports cartoons and two- and three-dimensional sculpture. His illustrations have been published in The Carmel Pine Cone and in "Family Today," a Southern California publication.

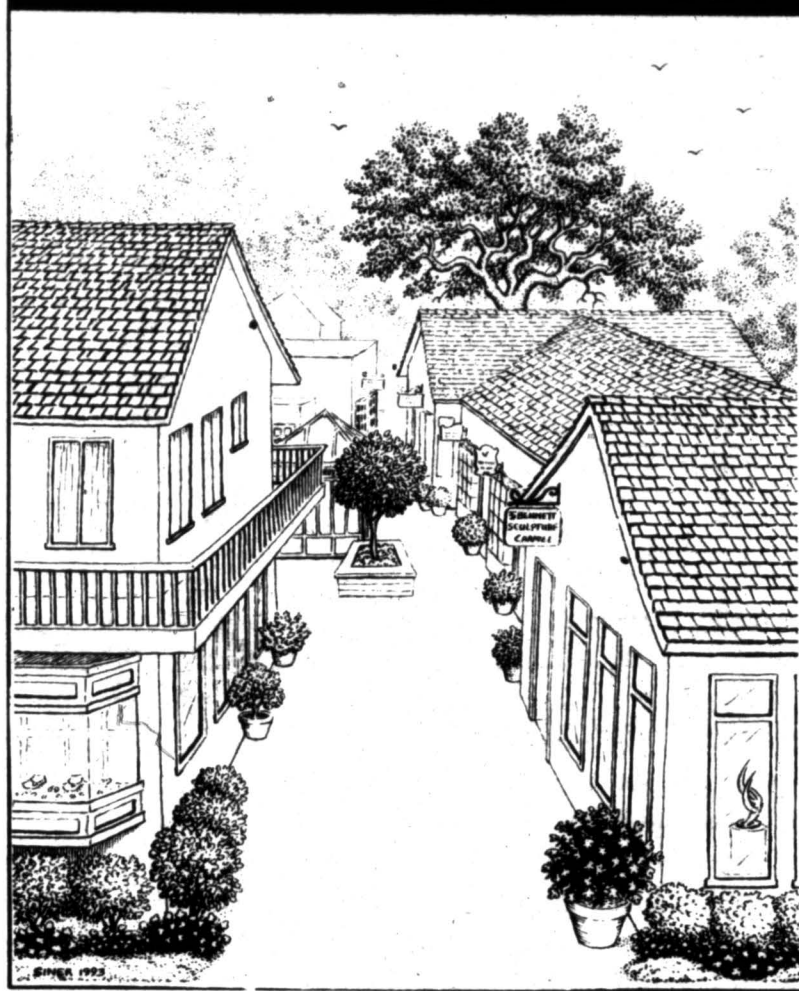

With nearly 15 years experience in the arts, Pappas now sells his work in a Monterey shop and has had it exhibited at several local art shows.

Obituaries

Creston W. Crockett
Creston W. Crockett of Carmel Valley, died of respiratory failure Nov. 19 at Community Hospital of the Monterey Peninsula. He was 71.

He was born in Loveland, Okla., on Sept. 10, 1922, and attended Oklahoma State University before being drafted in World War II.

A retired Army captain with 22 years of military service, Mr. Crockett moved to the Monterey Peninsula in 1947 while in the Army. He later built a home in Carmel Valley.

Following retirement from the Army, he worked as a groundskeeper at Asilomar Conference Center from 1968 to 1978. Mr. Crockett was a member of the Chatterbox Breakfast Club where he was known as "Chris."

He was a volunteer for many years with the Carmel Valley Volunteer Fire Department. An amateur inventor, he was also an avid military history buff and enjoyed carpentry and gardening.

He is survived by two sons, Alan and Carey, both of Carmel Valley; a daughter, Carole Colter of Redmond, Wash.; a brother, Donald of Roswell, N.M. and three grandchildren. Another brother, James, died in 1990.

A memorial service was held tomorrow at the Community Center in Carmel Valley Village. The Paul Mortuary was in charge of cremation arrangements at the Little Chapel by-the-Sea.

The family suggests that any memorial contributions be sent to the Carmel Valley Volunteer Fire Department.

Daniel David Derr

Daniel David Derr of Carmel Valley died of cancer Dec. 7 at the Hospice House in Monterey. He was 50.

A native of Columbus, Ohio, Mr. Derr was born on Aug. 3, 1943. He had been a self-employed journalist on the Monterey Peninsula for 25 years.

He was a member of Our Lady of Mount

Henry C. Bruce, resident since 1930, dies at 85

HENRY CLARK Bruce of Carmel, a printer for The Herald for 54 years, died Dec. 21 at Crestwood Convalescent Hospital in Monterey.

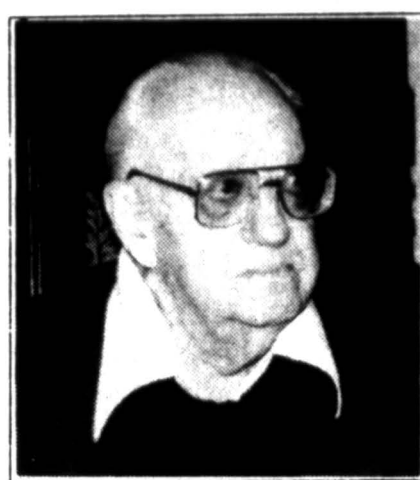

Bruce, who moved to Carmel in 1930, had established a circle of friends who fondly remember his good nature and wealth of information.

He was known for carrying a little black book with "Bruce's Almanac" embossed in gold on the cover. It contained slips of paper, business cards, newspaper clippings, magazine articles, scribbled notes, all bearing an array of facts and statistics.

Jack Sevier, Red Lion Tavern manager, whom Bruce considered his favorite bartender, said, "I'm going to miss him beat me out of a drink. He was a great person who never had a bad word to say about anyone."

Born on Oct. 14, 1908, in Dix, Ill., Bruce apprenticed in the printing shop of the Mount Vernon Register News in Illinois.

In 1926, he joined the Navy and served aboard the USS Colorado, where he continued his work in the ship's print shop.

HENRY CLARK BRUCE

After the war, a friend suggested he move to Carmel and work for The Carmel Pine Cone. He worked for the local newspaper part time for six years and then was hired full time as a printer for The Herald in Monterey.

He is survived by a stepson, Steve Shudoma of Huntington Beach, and a stepdaughter, Wendy Just of Grants Pass, Ore.

His first wife, Georgie Ann, died in 1978, and his second, Moira (Twig), died in 1987.

Memorial services were held at the Little Chapel By-The-Sea in Pacific Grove. Inurnment took place at San Joaquin Valley National Cemetery in Gustine.

The family suggests any memorial contributions be sent to the donor's favorite charity.

Carmel Church in Carmel Valley.

Surviving are a daughter, Maria of El Segundo; a son, Jason of Salem, Ore.; his parents, Robert and Bernadene Derr of Lanesville, Ind.; a brother, James of Lanesville; three sisters, Susan Tidrick of Stamford, Conn., Patricia Ciccone of Oriental, N.C. and Monica Derr-Bigelow of Francetown, NM.

Memorial services were held at Our Lady of Mount Carmel Church. The family suggests that any memorial contributions be sent to the Hospice of the Central Coast or Our Lady of Mount Carmel Church.

Bernice Riley Hull

Bernice Riley Hull of Carmel, died Dec. 4 at Community Hospital of the Monterey Peninsula. She was 81.

Mrs. Hull, a resident of Carmel for 58 years, was born Jan. 4, 1912, in Petaluma. She graduated from San Francisco State Teachers College in 1935 and was employed as a primary school teacher with the Carmel Unified School District at Sunset School for 11 years. Mrs. Hull was also active with the Carmel Mission Basilica.

She is survived by her husband, Arthur and a sister, Dolores Magrath of Monterey.

A private Mass was celebrated at the Ave Maria Convalescent Hospital. Cremation was held at the Little Chapel by-the-Sea and the ashes were scattered at sea. The Paul Mortuary was in charge of arrangements.

The family suggests that any memorial contributions be sent to the donor's favorite charity.

Billee Kallvy

Billee Kallvy, a former resident of Carmel, died Nov. 29 at the Washoe Medical Center in Reno, Nev. He was 81.

She had lived in Carmel for 24 years until moving to Fallon, Nev., in 1990.

Mrs. Kallvy was born in Priddy, Texas, on Oct. 8, 1912. She was a graduate of Howard Payne University in Brownwood, Texas, and had taught school for 25 years.

She was a member of the Carmel Foundation and the American Association of University Retired Persons, the auxiliary of the Veterans of Foreign Wars, the Violet Club and various garden clubs and art and library organizations.

Survivors include her husband, Hugo; a daughter, Jean Reeves of Fallon; a brother, Edd Boler of Pharr, Texas and a sister, Jewel Polk of Houston.

She was preceded in death by two husbands, Robert Sumrall and Adrian Bentley.

Funeral services were held at the First Baptist Church in Pharr. The Skinner Funeral Home in Pharr was in charge of arrangements.

Jeff Davi named as Monterey Peninsula 'Realtor of the Year'

THE MONTEREY Peninsula Association of Realtors has named Jeff Davi, a local real estate broker, as "Realtor of the Year."

Davi, a third generation Monterey Peninsula resident, was honored Dec. 3 at a ceremony held at the Inn at Spanish Bay.

Davi made a splash on the peninsula during his unsuccessful bid for Monterey County 5th District Supervisor.

Locally educated, Davi attended Junipero Serra School and Robert Louis Stevenson. He holds a Bachelor of Science degree in economics and business administration from St. Mary's College of California.

Davi is the designated realtor of his family owned and operated real estate firm, which has served Monterey County since the late 1950s.

A Realtor member since 1989, Davi has participated in many Association functions, both locally and statewide.

The Golden Years

By Myles Williams

"Even in later life, changing certain risk behaviors into healthy ones can improve health and reduce the likelihood of disability." So states the report spelling out objectives of "Healthy People 2000," a program of the U.S. Health and Human Services Department to upgrade the health of Americans of all ages. Among 30 objectives relating directly to the elderly, the program seeks reductions in injuries and deaths from falls among people over 65, and in deaths from epidemic-related pneumonia and flu. Other objectives include increasing the proportions of women 50 and over who regularly receive mammograms and comprehensive breast examinations, and of women over 70 who have a PAP test at recommended intervals.

What lies ahead when the first baby boomers — people born between 1946 and 1964 — reach retirement age 20 years from now? In New York State, almost half the population will be 55 or older, according to a State Senate task force. Its report recommends encouraging retirees to work part-time to avoid a labor shortage.

THE CARMEL PINE CONE'S PHOTOGRAPH OF THE YEAR

By SUSAN BECK

SUZANNE OBERG gives the 'thumbs up' signal after the automobile in which she was riding nearly overturned on Highway One north-bound near Carpenter Street on May 10. Both riders were unhurt in the accident, but had to be removed by firefighters using the Jaws of Life.

Letters to the Editor

Letters to the editor are welcome. Views on all matters are acceptable, following the guidelines of good taste. Letters should not exceed 250 words in length. Letters are subject to editing for style and length. Each letter must contain name, address, telephone number and signature, and preferably be typed and double spaced. Anonymous letters, or those with no phone numbers will not be accepted.

Plotkin's review praised Dear Editor:

The absence of music reviews in The Monterey County Herald was really brought home to me when I read The Carmel Pine Cone's review following Awadagin Pratt's performance in the Keyboard Artist Series (Nov. 21) in Carmel's Sunset Center Theater.

Nathalie Plotkin's enthusiastic, informed review was an education, something on the order that The Herald's late critic, Patrick Franklin, frequently provided and is now so sorely missed.

Because of Plotkin's review, I realized better what I had missed, even though I was there. For reviews are like editorials — a good one sums up, points out, gives one a broader perspective than news columns or even witnessing an event may give.

Furthermore, for a performer, a good review not only may enlighten, but it also advances the career of the artist, creating more audiences eager to hear.

A good review is a service to the entire community.

Thank you, dear Pine Cone, for providing this service to our community.

Tear it down!

Dear Editor:

I've a suggestion to those who are to decide the fate of the old Holman's/Ford's building in Pacific Grove. In a phrase: Tear that hideous albatross down!

That big ugly thing may have been the cat's meow in some bygone era, but today it looms as a monument to that era during which form not only didn't follow function, it wasn't even considered!

It's nondescript character is so banal that it screams out with a rudeness that rapes even the most common of sensibilities.

Tear it down, Pagrovians, and prove that some of you have some measure of class beyond the contrivance you are so well known for!

The bald eagle's recovery

THE BALD eagle, once ubiquitous throughout the continental United States, dwindled from perhaps a population of 50,000 to a low of about 800 breeding pairs in 1972.

Recent surveys reveal the bald eagle population has now reached at least 3,750 pairs. Because of the bird's steady recovery during the past thirty years, the U.S. Fish & Wildlife Service is close to removing the bald eagle from the endangered species list. In early 1994, the bird's status will likely be delisted from "endangered" to "threatened", a much less precarious classification. The bald eagle population recovery is evidence of many successful federal, state, and private organization's conservation efforts.

Since 1940, the bald eagle has been a federally protected species. However, protracted human encroachment - including pressures from shooting, habitat loss, and mostly the pesticide DDT - contributed to the eagle's precipitous population decline which peaked in 1972. The Endangered Species Act was enacted in 1973 to protect the bald eagle as well as many other animal and plant species.

A strong comeback

Since the early 1970's, close population monitoring, eradication of DDT use in the United States, translocation programs and protection of critical habitats has enabled the bald eagle to make a strong comeback.

While the species is increasing in many parts of the United States, it still is absent or struggling in other locations. Even though we have ostensibly saved the species from extinction, there are many local challenges ahead. In California, the majority of bald eagle breeding pairs are situated in the northern half of the state where there are undisturbed habitats and a mitigated human presence.

Here in the central and southern parts of the state, the California Bald Eagle Working Team (CBEWT), which includes the Ventana Wilderness Sanctuary, is actively involved with the re-establishment of the bald eagle to their historical breeding sites. The central and southern California regions present greater challenges to the bald eagle's recovery. Most of the state's demographics are situated here, thus contributing to greater habitat and toxic threats with the bird's successful re-establishment.

To augment the eagle's survival chances, we are working hard to the preserve remaining habitats by implementing environmental education programs and translocating bald eagles to former breeding regions.

Paying dividends

Slowly, our efforts are paying dividends in the central and southern parts of California. Recent bald eagle surveys show there are at least 115 breeding pairs in California. Until recently, there were only a few remaining breeding pairs in the southern half of California.

With the efforts of the VWS, Institute for Wildlife Studies, and the CBEWT, we have re-established and documented at least 10 breeding pairs in southern and central California. This spring, a pair from the 1988 VWS release successfully bred and fledged two eaglets near Lake San Antonio. This confirms the first documentation of breeding bald eagles along the central coast since 1934!

Since 1986, the VWS has released 61 bald eagles along the California central coast. We are very close to actualizing our original goal of re-establishing four breeding pairs along the Big Sur coast. Since the eagles do not reach reproductive maturity until about five years of age, we still need another year or two to evaluate our efforts. For the first time in many years, local residents are once again witnessing immature and adult bald eagles soaring above the spectacular Big Sur coastline.

In 1994, VWS is planning one last bald eagle collection in Juneau, Alaska. We hope the 1994 bald eagle collection will be the last necessary effort for their re-establishment along the central coast. Even if the local recovery takes a few more years, we will be cooperatively involved with The San Francisco Zoological Society's project with the hacking of their captively bred birds at our hacksite in the mountains above Big Sur.

How you can help

We are making an "all out appeal" for help to make 1994 the most successful bald eagle collection and release to date! How can you help? There are many ways to take part in our bald eagle recovery program and take pride in that you directly helped re-establish bald eagles in your community. The easiest manner to help VWS is to become a member, or financially contribute in one of the following ways:

- $50 Helps buy eagle food for a couple days.
 - $100 contributes to the purchase of rope, day packs, dissecting scopes, wheel barrows, tripods, large slide projector screen, copying and paper costs, TV and VCR, AM/FM radio/cassette player; will provide a monthly aerial transect survey of our local bald eagles; and allows payment for van rental costs for transporting eaglets from the airport to the hacksite in Big Sur.
 - $250 supports one intern for a month's research and education work; assists with monthly maintenance and gas costs for VWS bald eagle vehicles; purchases our bald eagle color bands; and allows us to purchase one radio transmitter for our eagles.
 - $400 will buy our bald eagle collection team airline tickets to Alaska.
 - $800 will pay a hacksite attendant's monthly salary.
 - $1000 will pay a hacksite biologist's monthly salary. In addition, it will contribute to the purchase of two new eagle vehicles for the 1994 Bald Eagle Program.
 - $2,500 purchases one bald eagle satellite transmitter and contributes to one-half the total cost of translocating one eagle from Alaska to California.
- Your donation will make all the difference in the many projects we take on in behalf of our environmental challenges. As an added incentive, we are offering a Big Sur Ornithology Lab T-Shirt to all contributors of $50 or more.

Additional information can be obtained by calling Jeff Davis (624-1202) or Craig Hohenberger (626-8348). Or write us at VWS, Coast Route, Monterey, CA 93940.

SPOTLIGHT ON SOCCER

RLS standout getting in his kicks

■ With video in hand, Leland Felsenthal hopes colleges tune in

By GARTH MERRILL

LELAND FELSENTHAL is starring in his own movie, and it's no act.

No, the Robert Louis Stevenson senior, a sweeper on the Pirates' soccer team, is not headed for Hollywood. Instead, the transfer student from Beverly Hills High hopes his feature will propel him into a role in higher education, with an opportunity to continue playing one of his two favorite sports in college.

Felsenthal, who earned all-Mission Trail Athletic League honorable mention status last soccer season, recently hired a video crew to record him in action in the Pirates' early-season matches. He plans to send the tape to colleges in which he is interested, including Hamilton and Skidmore in New York.

Actually, Felsenthal said the idea of a video stemmed from one of the colleges, which requested a look at him in action. But he has not ruled out the idea of shopping the video around once it is through, sometime upon returning to school after the holiday vacation break.

"I'm in the options business right now," Felsenthal said.

An all-MTAL placekicker for the RLS football team, he had a similar tape made for football, and his soccer coach Peter Ulrich said the star sweeper's initiative has gained notice on both fields of play.

Ulrich said he can "easily envision" Felsenthal playing collegiate soccer, because he has all the right tools.

"He's fast," Ulrich said of Felsenthal. "He's aggressive, too. Probably his biggest thing is his skill."

That may come as a surprise to those who thought Felsenthal was simply a place kicker with a big foot.

"It's not just a big foot," Ulrich stressed. "It's a reliable one. He puts the ball where he wants it to go, and he doesn't make many errors."

Although Felsenthal was a key part of the Pirates' successes on the football field this season, he admits to feeling more useful on the soccer field. In football, as a place kicker, he plays a supporting role.

"In soccer," Felsenthal said, "I'm always in the game."

In the meantime, Leland Felsenthal hopes he looks as good in pictures as he does to his coach and teammates.

LELAND FELSENTHAL (5) of Robert Louis Stevenson has all the right tools, according to his coach, and has the potential to be a fine collegiate player.

Padres, 0-9, hope '94 brings success

By GARTH MERRILL

MAKING THE most out of experience — that is the uphill challenge facing coach Jeff Wright and the Carmel High School varsity soccer team.

Thus far, the Padres — 0-9 overall and 0-2 in Mission Trail Athletic League play — have not been so successful.

"We have to find ways to put the ball into the net," said Wright. "We see all the athletic talent that can do that."

But that talent is young, and young players sometimes make what Wright calls "errors of enthusiasm."

For the Padres to produce offensively, they

Youth soccer league director giving something back

By GARTH MERRILL

CAMERON RAST is quick to say that the game of soccer has given him a great deal in his young life. Now he is prepared to give something back.

CAMERON RAST, director of the Monarch Youth Soccer League, wears many hats in his new post.

Rast, captain of the 1992 U.S. Olympic team that played in Seoul, South Korea, has brought his experience and knowledge to Carmel where he is the new director of the Monarch Youth Soccer League.

Though Rast currently plays and coaches on a Santa Clara professional team, he also is preparing for the second half of his career — as a coach.

"It's the great part of the game, watching the young ones get into it," Rast said.

Rast, only 23, will be working with young ones plenty in his new role as MYSL director. The league was created in 1991 and has since grown into an organization that makes soccer possible for more than 300 kids from Carmel and Carmel Valley.

The MYSL has grown so large it needs Rast as a full-time director. His duties range from putting on clinics and offering one-on-one instruction to arranging league schedules and printing up flyers.

"Not just a soccer league"

"We're not just a soccer league," he said. "We train coaches and referees, we put on clinics and tournaments. It's a real unique situation. I wish there were more programs like it."

In addition to serving as captain of the Olympic

'Micro soccer' league set to start

THE MONARCH Youth Soccer League will feature "micro soccer" in its Winter League play beginning next month, according to Cameron Rast, director.

Micro soccer is a four-on-four game played on a smaller field, with smaller goals and no goalies. It is a fast-paced game that improves skill levels and gives each player a greater chance to participate than the traditional 11-player format of full-field soccer, Rast said.

The deadline to sign up for Winter League competition is Jan. 5. Play begins Jan. 15.

For more information, or to have an application mailed, one can call the MYSL at 626-2905.

team, Rast was a two-time All-American at the University of Santa Clara, where he led the Broncos to two appearances in the NCAA Championships. He grew up in Simi Valley, in Southern California's will need the experience of its veterans, Jono Spaulding and Melissa May. Carmel has seven players in its lineup who are either freshmen or sophomores, so these two seasoned booters are an important ingredient in Wright's formula for winning.

Padres hoping Spaulding, May lift team to next level

Spaulding, a senior who was the place kicker for the Padre football team in the fall, may be the most important ingredient of all. Wright calls him his "central player."

"He is a great passer with a big, powerful leg full of fire and muscle," Wright said. "He plays really well off of other players."

May, a junior, also has weapons that only experience on the soccer pitch can give. A tenacious player, Wright said May can see the field like a pro.

"She possesses the best field sense of anybody on our team," Wright observed.

And when May looks around, she sees a lot of young faces, such as starting sophomore Cheyenne Stoney-Stevens.

CHEYENNE STONEY-STEVENS found reason to smile as he is pictured with his grandmother, Joan Sailer, but the Carmel High sophomore would be even happier if he and his teammates could snap their season-long losing streak.

Typical of Carmel's youth movement, Stoney-Stevens is a dedicated, fast and skillful player who has been playing with his equally inexperienced teammates for the few weeks of preseason.

Stoney-Stevens, the Padres' center forward, was a starter in his freshman season last year. This summer, he spent time in the regional Olympic Development Program to sharpen his game.

Unfortunately for Stoney-Stevens, he has suffered through a series of injuries during the young season that has limited his playing time.

"Cheyenne has only one speed, and that's 110 percent," his coach said. "So he is perennially banged up."

Carmel hopes to enter the new year free of injuries and free of the nine-game losing streak. The Padres hope to get the monkey off their backs when play Montclair Prep in a non-league game at 10 a.m. Wednesday at Carmel High.

The Padres will resume league action at 3 p.m. on Wednesday, Jan. 5 when they travel to Salinas to play Palma.

Things are looking up for Pirates, but only time will tell if the team's for real

By GARTH MERRILL

AT 2-0, ROBERT Louis Stevenson's early-season soccer success suggests it has made the most of its blend of new and returning players.

"What we have is a team that is, on the whole, pretty young," said RLS mentor Peter Ulrich.

"It looks good now," Ulrich said, "and it feels good now, but I'll reserve my final judgment for a few weeks from now."

By that time the Pirates will have made it through the first half of the schedule and faced everybody in the Mission Trail Athletic League.

What has Ulrich feeling good right now is the performances of his veterans, especially senior captains Leland Felsenthal and Matt Miller.

Felsenthal was an all-league kicker for RLS' football team in the fall. Equally adept at soccer, he earned an all-league honorable mention as an RLS halfback last season.

"He is certainly the anchor of the defense," Ulrich said.

Miller, another "solid defender," may be the Pirates' inspirational leader.

"His attitude is just infectious," Ulrich observed. "He's responsible for a lot of the positive attitude out there."

Players with experience like Felsenthal and Miller can give a team confidence, which is sometimes an underestimated weapon. Nobody know that better than Ulrich, who spends a lot of time working on his team's ball-handling skills so it has even more of it.

"When you feel like you can make the ball do what you want, do what it has to do, that always gives you confidence," Ulrich said. "I think that's what makes the difference against the big teams."

San Fernando Valley, where he started playing youth league soccer. He said he started trying out for the Olympic Development Program when he was 15 years old. He knows the game at every level.

Rast said that while the soccer climate in Monterey is not as intense as in other parts of the state, he noted the MYSL is slowly turning up the heat.

"It was an under-developed soccer community," Rast said. "Soccer hasn't traditionally been a big sport in this area, though I think that's changing. We're in the beginning stages, and we're trying to expedite through a couple of those stages."

One of the stages is education, especially of the parents. Rast said that most soccer parents are long on support, but often short on understanding of the game. As a remedy, Rast recently sponsored a "parents play day," in which the adults played while their kids cheered from the sidelines.

"I think it helped create a lot of understanding on the parents' part of just what their kids go through out on the field," he observed.

Life has been moving quickly lately for Rast, who was married in September. He and his wife, Mindy, moved to Monterey in November and he then took his new job with the MYSL.

"We're sort of starting out a new life," Rast said.

It is a new life for local youth soccer, too, and in Rast it appears to be in good shape.

'Entertaining and easily digested'

■ Neville's 'Calculated Risk' makes ideal holiday reading

By KRISTINA S. MEAD

TO THOSE familiar with her first book, The Eight, Katherine Neville needs no introduction, and her name guarantees a well-written, gripping adventure.

In her new novel, A Calculated Risk, Neville takes us into the world of high finance. The heroine, Verity Banks, is a vice president at Bank of the World, a prestigious financial institution. A highly-paid executive with her own box at the opera and a penthouse swathed in white orchids, Verity is nonetheless stifled by her boss's constant back-stabbing.

The last straw comes when Kislick Willingly III (known behind his back as "Kiss-it-Willingly the Turd") denies her proposal for beefed-up security on all computer systems handling money, and destroys her chances for job advancement. That night, watching the San Francisco Opera perform Das Rheingold, Verity becomes inspired: why not show her superiors the extent of the security problem by stealing a large sum of money, and then returning it once the existence of a security leak has been proven?

Battle of wits

This seems simple and innocent enough until Verity's old mentor, Dr. Zoltan Tor (an elegant, tall, lanky, copper-haired computer expert), arrives on the scene and ups the ante. Suddenly her simple plot for revenge becomes a battle of wits and endurance as Tor and Verity struggle to see who can steal one billion dollars and invest it to earn 30 million dollars or more within three months.

In order to tempt Verity to risk her safe haven, Tor stipulates that she may use a computer to aid in the theft, but he may not. The stakes are high: whoever loses will have to grant the winner's fondest wish.

Complicating the matter is the not-so-hidden sexual attraction binding the two rivals. Their interactions sizzle with repressed passion.

'FOOL FISH,' an acrylic/mixed media on canvas created by Jan Wagstaff, will be part of the artist's exhibit at the College of Law.

New show at College of Law to open Jan. 4

A NEW exhibit at the Monterey College of Law Gallery will feature the pastel and acrylic works of artist Jan Wagstaff and a changed exhibit by sculptor Ken Wiese. The show will open on Jan. 4 and will continue through Feb. 15. The gallery is located at 404 Franklin Street, and is open to the public from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. Monday through Thursday.

Jan Wagstaff is artist-in-residence at the York School in Monterey. She earned her bachelor's and master's degrees in fine arts from California College of Arts and Crafts and has received a number of awards for her work.

Ken Wiese has lived in Carmel for 40 years. Wiese carves directly in wood and stone and works in welded steel, cast metals, resin and ceramics. His work is exhibited in galleries throughout the United States.

'The toast of the town'

WHEN RECOMMENDING a place to have breakfast in Carmel, the name of one restaurant keeps popping up.

Katy's Place, located in the heart of Carmel-by-the-Sea, has been serving the most extensive breakfast menu in the village for 12 years. Nobody leaves hungry.

The success of Katy's Place is due largely to the tireless efforts of Master Chef Ari Georgsson, a graduate of the Culinary Academy of Iceland.

Georgsson, who has owned and managed Katy's Place for the past five years, also is widely renowned as the former executive chef of the Covey Restaurant at Quail Lodge, where he worked for many years.

What makes Katy's stand apart from its competitors?

"For one thing, it's what you get for the money," Georgsson said. "It's the humongous portions - all the homemade food we put on your plate.

"When you leave, you're satisfied," Georgsson added. "That's the biggest difference."

Consider the nine different variations of eggs Benedict available at Katy's, each including three ranch eggs poached to order, perched atop an English muffin and served with a rich homemade hollandaise sauce and seasoned country potatoes. Sautéed vegetables, crab, shrimp, salmon and turkey are among the tempting possibilities.

Whether seeking a great omelette or eggs any style, Katy's Place has exactly what you're craving at a price you can live with. All breakfasts at Katy's are priced at less than $10.

Served with country potatoes and choice of toast and jam, you can enjoy your morning eggs with hickory smoked, thick-sliced bacon, Italian sausage, traditional pork sausage, cured ham steak, New York steak, lox, trout, calamari, even smoked North Atlantic herring.

And there are still more choices: cheese-filled blintzes covered with fresh berries and sour cream; homemade corned beef hash and eggs; huevos rancheros; fresh fruit waffles, French toast and six varieties of buttermilk pancakes.

Breakfast all day

While breakfast at Katy's is served all day, the lunch menu has a lot to offer hungry patrons as well.

There are award-winning hamburgers and sandwiches, served with your choice of country potatoes, mixed greens or potato salad.

Lunch specials include Katy's popular calamari jack burger, a calamari filet lightly breaded and grilled with Monterey Jack cheese.

There also are two different chicken breast sandwiches, a shrimp quesadilla, and the New Yorker - a bagel topped with smoked salmon, cream cheese, capers and onions.

Or, for something light, try one of Katy's salads. Choose between a shrimp salad, chef salad, tuna or chicken salad, or fresh fruit salad with yogurt.

While Georgsson says salespersons come to his restaurant every week trying to sell him cheaper foods that will save him money, he remains stubborn in his commitment to quality.

"I tell them, 'I don't want anything cheap, I want the best,'" Georgsson said. "When it comes right down to it, you're really not saving much by buying anything cheap.

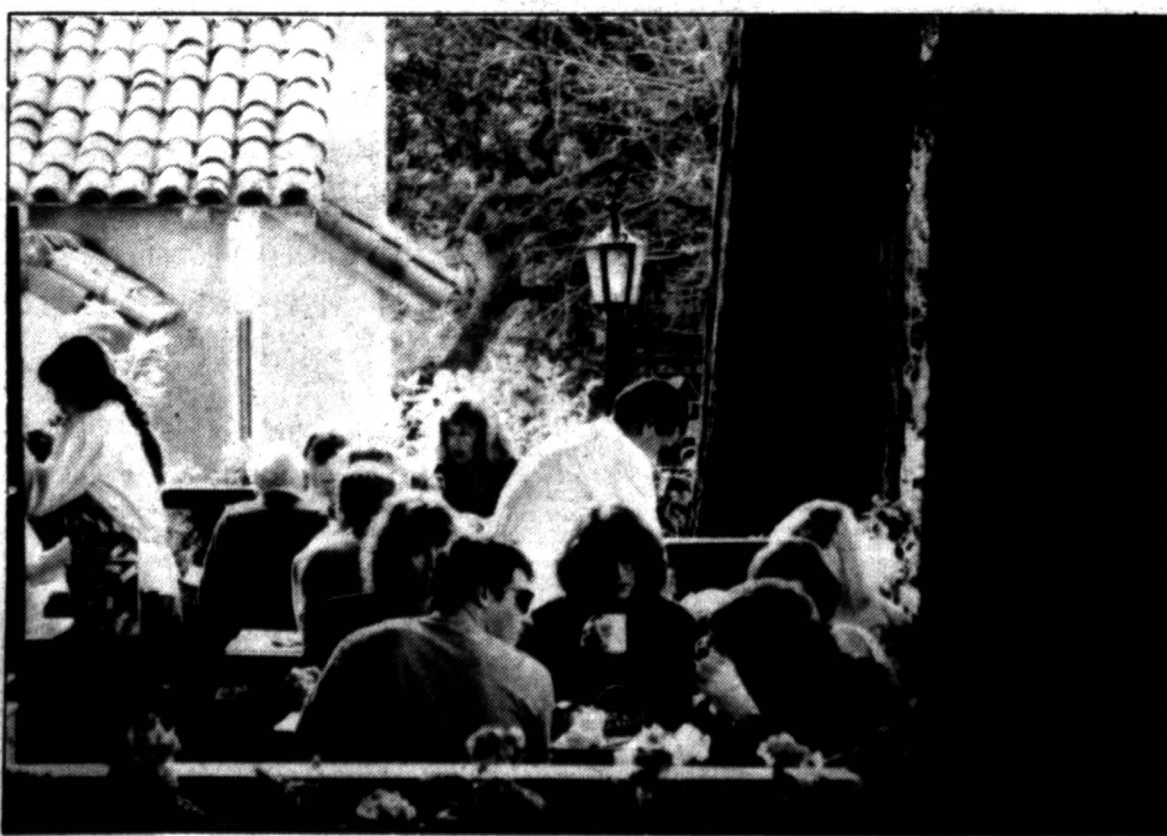

"The quality comes through," he added. "People appreciate that."

During warm weather, patrons can be seen dining and conversing beneath the redwood trees on Katy's outdoor patio, which has become quite popular, according to Georgsson.

Katy's Place is located on Mission between 5th and 6th avenues in downtown Carmel and is open daily from 7 a.m. to 2 p.m.

THE OUTDOOR patio at Katy's Place has become a popular spot to enjoy a great breakfast and good conversation.

THE LAUREL Wind Quartet, above, will be one of many groups performing in this area's first ever First Night Monterey.

First Night kicks off the New Year with lots of affordable, alcohol-free fun

FIRST NIGHT Monterey will offer entertainment of many kinds this New Year's Eve. The family-style celebration will take place between 4 p.m. and midnight on Dec. 31 in downtown Monterey.

Activities will include music of many cultures, dance, drama, painting, sculpture, mask-making and puppetry, among others. First Night events are designed to involve audience members as participants, to appeal to different age groups, and to be accessible to individuals with disabilities.

Performers will use both traditional venues, such as theaters, and unusual ones: churches, lobbies of office buildings, department store windows and balconies.

Buttons allowing admission to all events can be purchased for $8 at various locations. Further info is available at 373-4778.

Musicians join forces for varied New Year's Eve concert in Pacific Grove

ORGANIST JAMES Welch, soprano Carol Williams, and pianist Judy Midgley will present a concert for New Year's Eve at the First United Methodist Church at Sunset and 17 Mile Drive in Pacific Grove.

Tickets will be available at the door for $5. The concert will begin at 8 p.m. and will last approximately one hour.

Using the large 3-manual pipe organ at the church, Welch will offer unusual and entertaining numbers such as a Sousa March, a fugue on the "Pink Panther" theme, some jazz variations by George Shearing, and a new trumpet tune by Frederick Swann, who is known internationally for his organ playing at the Crystal Cathedral.

Judy Midgley, organist of First Presbyterian Church in Carmel, will join Welch in several duets for piano and organ, including the "Fantasie" by Clifford Demarest, an American composer.

Carol Williams, a soprano from Santa Barbara, will sing a medley from Okla-homa! in honor of the 50th anniversary of that Broadway musical, three arias from shows such as Die Fledermaus and Showboat, and a set of Brazilian folk songs in which she will be accompanied on the guitar by her husband Fred. The Williamses have just returned from living in Brazil for two years.

Further information about the concert is available by calling 372-5875.

'Les Troyens' will be broadcast live from Metropolitan Opera on KAZU

HECTOR BERLIOZ' "Les Troyens" will be broadcast live from the stage of the Metropolitan Opera House beginning at 9:30 a.m. Pacific Time on New Year's Day.

The opera can be heard over public radio station KAZU 90.3. Cast members will include French soprano Francoise Pollet as Cassandra, Maria Ewing as Dido, Gary Lakes as Aeneas, Donald Kaasch as Iopas, Thomas Hampson as Coroebus, and Paul Plishka as Narbal.

James Levine will conduct. The announcer for the broadcast will be Peter Allen.

The opera, which is based upon the tragic love story of Dido and Aeneas, was last heard in a Texaco-Metropolitan Opera radio broadcast during the 1983-84 season. The broadcast will run for approximately five hours.

'Falling Down' a powerful satire of life in the jam-packed lane

By CRAIG ARNOTT

GROWING UP in Los Angeles I accepted many peculiar things as normal. A third stage smog alert was a blessing in disguise because it meant we would be let out of school at noon.

A swim in the ocean would invariably leave me with skin itchy from chemical pollutants. Heavily congested traffic was so commonplace I was troubled when the freeways were light and I'd arrive at my destination early.

And always there was a mood of lazy unconcern. People were self-absorbed and tried everything to immunize themselves from the ugly sprawl they helped create.

Painfully accurate

As I watched Falling Down I found that not much has changed. The film is both a broad satire on Southern Californian life, and a painfully accurate testament to the ravages of apathy.

The sketchy plot revolves around D-fens (Michael Douglas), a testy defense worker identified only by his vanity plate. Caught in a traffic snarl in Pasadena one morning, he simply leaves his car on the road and decides to walk the 14 miles home to his daughter and ex-wife in Venice Beach.

Video pick of the week

So begins a series of confrontational episodes that turn D-fens from a simmering oddball into a raving vigilante. When he can't scrounge up enough coins for a phone call, he walks into a tattered market and is told he must buy something to get change.

The can of soda he selects costs 80 cents and still will not leave him with enough change to make the call. D-fens explodes, laying waste to the store with the owner's baseball bat. "I'm standing up for my rights as a consumer," he announces.

Coming unglued

Then there is the violent encounter with two gang members on whose turf he ignorantly stumbles. There are also run-ins with dimwitted fast-food employees, a fascist surplus store owner, rich golfers and a panhandler asking for money for food while munching a sandwich.

By the time D-fens reaches Venice he is certifiably unglued, having destroyed much public and private property while being rather casually tracked by the police.

Director Joel Shumacher has a great feel for Los Angeles, and the wide shots of the city's dirty, congested streets are grimly real and give the action an unnerving credibility.

So too does Douglas' measured performance. D-fens comes off not as a complete lunatic but as a muddled, almost sympathetic anti-hero who wrongly acts out his complaints, many of which are understandable.

Phrases like "the customer is always right" and "under construction" are seen to be bland slogans with little substance, as is often the case in real life. Instead of accepting these daily hindrances D-fens goes overboard and tries to correct them singlehandedly.

Because Falling Down's cartoonish vigilantism is so staged and extreme, it is easily dismissed. Yet the film powerfully highlights the crazy ongoing decay of urban life as if to say we can't simply roll up the window and change lanes.

Sharpen those pencils: Stevenson literary quiz hits the streets Jan. 1

MONTEREY PUBLIC Library and Bay Books will co-sponsor a literary quiz as part of the year-long Robert Louis Stevenson Centenary being celebrated throughout 1994.

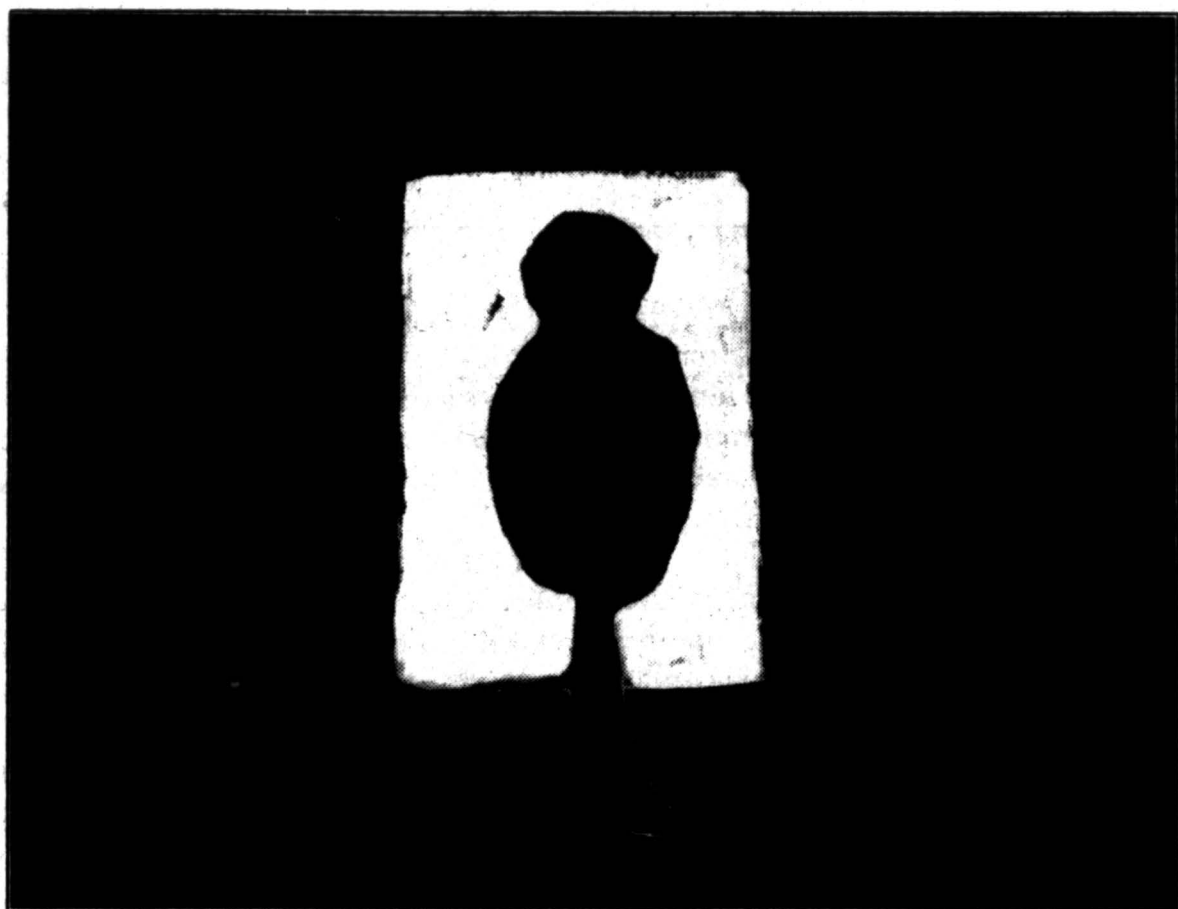

Copies of the quiz will be available after Jan. 1 at Monterey Public Library, the Monterey Public Library Bookmobile and Bay Books, located at 316 Alvarado Street.

Readers of all ages are welcome to submit quiz entries, which must be returned to the library no later than March 30. Those who answer all questions correctly will receive a $5 gift certificate from Bay Books.

All entrants will receive a certificate of participation and a commemorative bookmark from the library. Above all, the quiz offers an opportunity to explore the works of a fascinating writer which have endured for over a century.

More information can be gleaned by telephoning 646-3949.

Jazz Tides

By JOHN DETRO

First Night celebration promises music, dancers, clowns, magic — all in a family-style environment

MAY THE New Year bring you joyous labors and equally bright play. Looking back at 1993, I keep bumping into memories of Bill Jackson and Bob Abinante — two jazz figures who died during that time span.

Their absence makes the traditional "best of" lists seem a bit silly. Their absence has me valuing every player and singer on the scene.

I'd rather report some items that seem pertinent at this juncture — and thank Don Schamber of Monterey Peninsula College for his wisdom.

The passing of Bill and Bob touched Don this way: From now on, every concert by his MPC Jazz Ensemble will be dedicated to a living musician or vocalist. "Let's thank them while they're still with us," he said. Right on.

New notion

If you prefer a New Year's Eve celebration not fueled by booze, our area's First Night organization has put together a good deal. (Boston created the concept 17 years ago — "no alcohol is sold or permitted, creating a safe and welcoming environment for all ages.")

Here, you're invited to join in mask- and hat-making throughout the late afternoon. Creations will be worn in the People's Procession scheduled to start at 6 p.m. in downtown Monterey.

Then will come a five-hour schedule of entertainment at sites ranging from the Maritime Museum to Cooper-Molera Adobe (15 indoor and outdoor locations). Music, poetry, clowns, drama, magic acts, on and on.

Jazz pianist David Clay, for example, will offer an "interactive sound and light collage." Rick Chelew and friends plan Fires of Change percussion sets.

The singer Kirtana will present original tunes. Flamen music and dancing? Simply check out Guillermo Rios and El Grupo Savillano.

The grand finale will start at 11:45 p.m. at the Custom House Plaza. Buttons cost just $8 apiece. Call 373-4778 to identify the outlet nearest you. (All artists are paid and retain rights to their works.)

It's something parents and their youngsters can see and hear together. I hope lots of families go for this golden ring on New Year's Eve.

Kwanzaa

Meanwhile, an estimated 13 million African Americans now enjoy Kwanzaa — the cultural holiday created by Maulana Karenga 27 years ago. It runs from Dec. 26 through Jan. 1 and is based on First Fruits celebrations of African farming communities.

Books about Kwanzaa (for both children and adults) may be ordered at your favorite shop. And New York film maker Charles Butler Nuckolls III now has issued a video about the rich time. Call 1-800-330-2110 to order the $19.95 item. "No credit cards accepted."

Homes are decorated. Families gather on each of seven evenings to share warmth and talk about certain principles — unity, self-determination, collective work and responsibility, cooperative economics, purpose and building on legacies, creativity, faith.

The video opens with this toast: "For Mother Africa, the birthplace of mankind, for our African ancestors and their unyielding courage, for our parents and all that they have given us, for our children who are our future, for those who have come before us and struggled for our freedom."

Need I say that the same community and spirit gave us jazz? (The late Red Mitchell called jazz combos the perfect model of cooperative creativity.)

Her prize

Interracial relationships always have been part of the jazz world. San Francisco writer Alyce Miller has won the prestigious Flannery O'Connor Fiction Award for her collection of short stories about such relationships.

That work topped nearly 400 applicants. The annual award comes from University of Georgia Press and means the eight tales will be published by that house and released in autumntime 1994. She'll pocket $1,000 upfront and then royalties.

The 40-year-old Miller teaches creative writing at Santa Clara University. "I'm pretty shocked (about winning)," she said. "I did not set out to write racial stories. I like to think they explore, maybe, where the races intersect." Her title for the batch was Soft Glowings in the Common Blood. But Miller said she understands the publisher will change it.

Novel is a lighthearted romp through the world of finance

While Verity Banks and Zoltan Tor are fascinating creatures, they are not the only people in the book.

Kislick Willingly remains an ominous presence, wearing dark glasses and conducting meetings in "blackout mode."

In exchange for being able to use a computer, Verity finds Tor an accomplice, a radiant and irrepressible Georgian, a first-rate photographer. Georgian's mother, Baroness Lelia Maria von Daimlich, and Pearl Lorraine, Verity's racy, emerald-clad colleague, also become entangled in this escapade.

The action moves swiftly from steel-clad San Francisco office buildings and crypt-like New York City interiors housing ancient computers to auction houses, romantic getaways and idyllic Greek islands. In each setting, Neville shows a true touch, creating believable atmospheres and characters.

Wealth of knowledge

Not only is Neville an awe-inspiring repository of information concerning a broad variety of topics (photoengraving, epicureanism, banking, computer programming), but she is also able to convey this information to us gracefully and naturally.

Even those of us unable to balance our checkbooks will be able to follow the financial wheelings and dealings executed by her characters.

I once complained about another author having a good eye but a bad ear, meaning that she delineated events and relationships very accurately, but could not find the right dialogue in which to express each character's individuality.

If I were to quibble with Neville's writing, I would suggest that she has the opposite problem. Neville creates distinct voices for each one of her characters, but often places them in far-fetched situations.

However, if you agree to ignore the unlikelihood of certain occurrences, your enjoyment of this book is guaranteed.

All in all, A Calculated Risk is good holiday reading. It is witty, entertaining and easily digested.

For those who want something really thought-provoking, I recommend sticking with Neville's first novel, The Eight. But if you are in the mood for a lighthearted romp through the world of finance, give A Calculated Risk a chance.

The book is published by Ballantine and costs $20.

Inside Golf

By JANET COLES

Start new year right by focusing on fundamentals

SPENDING TIME working on solid set-up fundamentals can assure faster improvements and better ball contact every time.

Set up well and you may hit an acceptable shot even if you make a mediocre swing.

Set up poorly, particularly in your aim alignment, and you will hit a poor shot no matter how well you swing.

Properly preparing for each swing and shot is within everyone's capabilities.

Try giving maximum attention to the following fundamentals:

- Grip
- Aim and targeting
- Body alignment
- Stance
- Posture
- Ball Position
- Head Position
- Hand Position

Within the next few months in my column, I will cover these important fundamentals in more detail.

Let's start the new year by hitting the ball straight and working on the essential fundamentals.

Janet Coles toured 14 seasons on the Ladies Professional Golf Association and won four tour events. She retired as a top 30 all-time leading money winner on the LPGA. She currently teaches golf at Rancho Cañada Golf Club where she can be reached at 624-0111.

Getting '94 off on the right foot

THE FOURTH annual Rio Resolution Run, sponsored by The Rio Grill restaurant in Carmel, will again get the new year off to a running start. The run begins Saturday at 9 a.m. at the Crossroads Shopping Center in Carmel.

BEAT THE EDITOR

EVERY WEEK during the football season, Doug Thompson, managing editor of The Carmel Pine Cone, will challenge a guest forecaster in picking the top 10 games from the pro and collegiate slate.

LAST WEEK: Neither The Editor nor Craig Hohenberger, director of the Ventana Wilderness Society, fared well in Week #17, but someone had to win. And The Editor, though not able to even reach the .500 mark, won out by one game over Craig. Overall for the season, The Editor's record moves to 9-5-3.

THIS WEEK: Gary Gray, local attorney and a member of the Carmel Unified School District Board of Education, becomes the first guest forecaster to make two appearances in one season. You see, Gary was the lone prognosticator to chalk up a perfect 10-0 mark (he accomplished the feat in Week #1) and The Editor wants another shot at him in this the final week where we mix college bowl games with the NFL.

The Bright Side of Selling "By Owner"

One of the positives of trying to sell your home yourself is that you're likely to meet some terrific Realtors in the process. Most "By Owners" do eventually list their homes with a professional, often one who responded to their ads or "For Sale" sign.

If you decide you're ready to list, how should you select an agent? The most important thing is to find someone you like and trust, after all, he or she will be playing a crucial part in your life over the next weeks or months. Look for professionalism, and try to find an agent who is appropriately aggressive. Which ones followed up when they said they would? Which ones tried to stay in touch during the period you tried to sell yourself? Who was particularly helpful, providing the best information about pricing, staging your home, or hints on effective ad writing? An agent who is persistent in selling his or her services will probably be equally persistent in working to get your home sold.

HOMES SOLD

The following properties were transferred, according to records in Monterey County, between 1/93 and 11/93. This information is available to the public, and the Carmel Pine Cone makes all attempts to record this information accurately. The selling price of property can be determined by the transfer tax recorded with the County - the tax is approx. 1.01% of the selling price.
